'Making a Killing'

The ropes are ready, the crowd is waiting, and the hangman has a new apprentice. When Claus Kohler is apprenticed to Frantz Schmidt, Nuremberg's seasoned executioner, the two men are thrown together in a world where duty, morality, and power collide, and every decision leaves a mark. But as the gallows fill and suspicion takes root, their fates become dangerously entwined, until both must decide who they are, and which side of the rope they stand on. Making a Killing is a razor-sharp, dark comedy about justice, corruption, and the cost of survival in a world disturbingly like our own. Bold, biting, and impossible to ignore, the play takes inspiration from The Journal of Master Franz Schmidt, Public Executioner of Nuremberg, 1573-1617. Dementia Friendly Cake Concerts

Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra's Cake Concerts are relaxed chamber performances, specifically developed for people living with dementia, in informal, social environments, combining easy-listening repertoire with refreshments, cake and good company.

Cake Concerts offer a ready demonstration of music's power to connect people, rekindle relationships with loved ones, and even recall past experiences. However, for many people living with dementia, as well as their families and carers, it can be almost impossible to attend an evening concert. These accessible Cake Concerts fill the gap, catering to people's needs and ensuring everyone can experience the joy of live music.

Performing on flute, harp and cello, the BSO's Teatime Trio share a selection of works including popular classical hits and light film music, while audience members enjoy refreshments and a slice of cake. All are welcome, whether living in the community or in care and residential homes. People can come and go during the concert – it is fine to get up, move about, leave and return as many times as needed. These events have a profound effect on movement and communication amongst audience members, creating a positive shared experience for all who attend, and Artsreach is proud to be working with the BSO this season.

"The music performance was of great quality and there was a perfect mix of repertoire. The performers were very warm and friendly and a joy to listen to....We thought every detail of the afternoon had been well thought through including the breaks. Thank you so much for making events like this possible." GEMMA DIXON, MUSIC FOR MEMORY
