A TABLE FOR 50

Two middle-aged friends and members of the professional bourgeoisie, Philipp, a chef and restaurant owner as well as an incorrigible womanizer and Alitalia pilot; and Gina, a delicate effeminate television producer and venerable magistrate, gather for a debaucherous weekend at the latter's Parisian villa. There, as the two friends prepare for a Romanesque feast, truckloads of fine food and wine arrive, accompanied by 50 elegant and lithe prostitutes. Without a doubt, the rapacious and degraded hedonists are determined to eat themselves to death, one elaborate morsel after another, nevertheless, for what reason?

"While aficionados of black Gallic humor will find this film a feast, those unused to the earthiness of some French comedy will find this chronicle of the decadent suicides of two successful middle-aged artists utterly tasteless." Anon
