——— Timeless but adaptable design

Sustainability in producing new furniture is designing for true use – we keep an eye on how people use spaces and how they interact with furniture. Having a dialogue with architects and interior architects is our way of staying current and adapting pieces for bespoke spaces.

Our collection is highly tailorable, and we only produce on demand, hence minimising waste and opening the path for sustainable fabric and finishing choices.

Thanks to our strong design and manufacturing expertise, Arktis serves its customers in a highly customer-oriented manner. The collections serve as a starting point for furnishing interiors. Based on these standard products, we tailor furniture according to the needs of our customers. This creates functional and aesthetically crisp and finished interiors. Every designer in the Arktis team has their own recognisable handprint, which allows the collection to offer different options and perspectives on interior design.

——— Standing the test of time

Arktis furniture is designed to stand the test of time. The investment in high-quality Arktis furniture ensures that the interior looks sharp even after years and decades. Solid wood or metal is mainly used as the frame material for Arktis products. Solid wood or laminate is selected on exposed surfaces. The upholstery parts are also designed for long-term use, using strong structures and high-quality fabrics in public spaces. Arktis products are guaranteed for a period of five years.
