Thoughts of a Headteacher

You will know by now that I will be leaving my post as Headteacher at the end of this term. It is certainly a time of mixed emotions for me and my family.

Spaxton means the world to me personally and professionally and it can be very difficult to differentiate them from each other. Although I know any period of change can be tricky, I leave will the school in a good position to move forward in and will leave in good hands, with Mr Kelly ready to lead the school in the interim period.

Since the letter was sent out to parents, last week, I have had cards and well-wishers on the gate, which I have been very grateful for. Although Easter will soon come quickly, the second half of the Spring Term is a time to ensure that as much progress can be made as possible.

Don't count the days; make the days count!

Have a lovely half-term holiday.
