

11 Princelet Street

A RARE SPITALFIELDS RESIDENCE AND MIXED-USE INVESTMENT

BELCOR

Executive Summary

11 Princelet Street presents a rare opportunity to acquire a sympathetically restored mixed-use Georgian townhouse in the heart of Spitalfields, combining a characterful residential home with income-producing commercial studio accommodation.

Located at the centre of London's vibrant City Fringe, the Grade II freehold property occupies a quiet historic street within the Fournier Street Conservation Area, moments from Brick Lane, Spitalfields Market and Commercial Street.

The building was originally constructed in 1719 by Daniel Bray and forms part of a collection of early Georgian houses that define the architectural character of Spitalfields. In 2007 the property was carefully restored by architect Chris Dyson, preserving its historic fabric while adapting the building for modern residential and commercial use.

The property now provides a four-bedroom residential townhouse across the upper floors, with self-contained commercial studio accommodation at ground and lower ground floors, currently let to Formed Group Limited (trading as Hendel & Hendel), and producing an income of £90,000 per annum.

The opportunity offers occupiers and investors the ability to secure unique freehold ownership in a highly sought-after City Fringe location, benefiting from a combination of historic architectural character, residential appeal and commercial income.

Investment Rationale

RARE FREEHOLD OPPORTUNITY

Opportunity to acquire a freehold mixed-use Georgian townhouse in the heart of Spitalfields, one of London's most characterful and tightly held historic districts.

ARCHITECTURALLY SIGNIFICANT BUILDING

Originally constructed in 1719 by Daniel Bray, the Grade II listed property forms part of the Fournier Street Conservation Area and has been sensitively restored by architect Chris Dyson.

PRIME SPITALFIELDS LOCATION

Situated moments from Brick Lane, Spitalfields Market and Commercial Street, within London's vibrant City Fringe district and walking distance of Liverpool Street Station.

MIXED-USE INCOME PROFILE

Ground and lower ground floors provide commercial studio accommodation let to Formed Group Limited (trading as Hendel & Hendel), with a four-bedroom residential townhouse across the upper floors providing scope for owner occupation or letting.

STRONG UNDERLYING RESIDENTIAL APPEAL

Desirable residential accommodation in a supply-restricted central London location, providing a defensive value anchor supported by consistent investor and end-user demand.

CREATIVE COMMERCIAL OCCUPIER MARKET

Spitalfields and Shoreditch continue to attract a strong mix of creative, design and technology occupiers, supporting long-term occupational demand.

EXCEPTIONAL CONNECTIVITY

Liverpool Street Station provides access to the Elizabeth Line, Central, Metropolitan, Circle and Hammersmith & City lines, connecting the property across London and beyond.

LONG-TERM CAPITAL GROWTH POTENTIAL

Prime City Fringe locations such as Spitalfields have demonstrated strong long-term capital appreciation, underpinned by constrained supply and sustained occupier demand.

“Originally constructed in 1719 by Daniel Bray, the Grade II listed property forms part of the Fournier Street Conservation Area.”

A Rare Combination of Studio and Townhouse Living

A distinctive live–work configuration, combining design-led commercial studio space with a beautifully restored Georgian residential townhouse above.

The building has been carefully adapted to provide self-contained workspace across ground and lower ground floors, while the upper levels form an elegant four-bedroom home arranged across multiple floors.

This arrangement reflects the historic character of Spitalfields, where buildings were traditionally used as homes, workshops and studios for master craftsmen and merchants.

Today the lower floors operate as a creative design studio, occupied by Hendel & Hendel, while the upper floors provide exceptional residential accommodation within one of London’s most architecturally significant districts.

Georgian Town House

The upper floors provide a characterful four-bedroom residential home, which has been sensitively restored and benefits from generous ceiling heights, well-proportioned rooms and the architectural qualities typical of early Georgian houses.

The residence is accessed by an independent entrance to the right-hand side of the property.

Studio Workspace

Located across the ground and lower ground floors, the commercial accommodation provides flexible studio space suited to creative and design-led occupiers, access via a separate entrance fronting Princelet Street.

The space is currently occupied by Hendel & Hendel, who operate the premises as their London Experience Studio, a collaborative environment for interior designers and retail partners.

The layout provides open studio areas, display zones and workspace.

History of the Town House

The house was originally erected in 1719 by Daniel Bray, citizen and painter of London, and over the following decades was home to a range of occupants, including a clergyman in 1724 and later the carpenter Alexander Christie in 1766.

Like many buildings in Spitalfields, its fortunes shifted over time and by the early twentieth century the original structure had deteriorated significantly. Following a collapse in the 1930s, little of the eighteenth-century house remained.

When architect Chris Dyson purchased the property in 2006, the only surviving element of the original building was the panelled staircase dating from the 1720s, which became the backbone and inspiration for a complete architectural reinvention.

The restoration combined a sensitive re-establishment of the Georgian façade with bold contemporary interventions throughout the interior.

The project also revitalised the nineteenth-century workshop building in the rear garden, originally constructed in 1840. Featuring king-post trusses and a large lantern rooflight, the structure was restored and adapted as studio space for Chris Dyson's architectural practice. Subsequent works introduced a lower level and gallery space, creating light-filled interiors that blend historic fabric with modern design.

Today the property represents a distinctive synthesis of Georgian heritage and contemporary architectural transformation, reflecting Spitalfields' long tradition of homes that combine living, craft and creativity.

Income Summary

Hendel & Hendel is a British manufacturer of premium cabinet hardware supplying interior designers, architects and retailers internationally.

Founded in 1971, the company remains a family-run business now led by the third generation, with a strong reputation for craftsmanship, materials expertise and engineering-led design.

The company operates its London presence from The Experience Studio, a collaborative workspace where designers and trade partners can explore hardware collections, develop interior schemes and specify products for residential and commercial projects.

The studio also hosts industry workshops, product demonstrations and collaborative sessions with brands across the wider design sector.

Hendel & Hendel's presence in Spitalfields reflects the area's reputation as one of London's leading creative and design districts, home to a diverse mix of architecture, fashion, technology and interiors businesses.
