

Shift your mindset and collaborate

— A one-day masterclass

Learn why collaboration has become the most effective business ethos and discover how your own mindset either supports you in collaborating or holds you back.

Programme Outline

During this one-day masterclass Lynn and Norton discuss the wider social and business context for collaboration and take you through some thought-provoking exercises to understand how your mindset may be getting in the way of collaborating. Lynn and Norton will share their collaborative intelligence model providing a framework for understanding the multiple needs at play in any collaborative scenario. To support you in going forward they will give you some tips and practices for developing a collaborative mindset.

Participant Profile

For leaders wanting or needing to collaborate.

What you will experience

In this masterclass, you'll gain insights needed to recognise what the real challenges are for individuals, teams and organisations to collaborate:

- Discover why organisations are changing and the importance of collaboration within this change
- Learn to recognise your own mindset towards collaboration
- Learn some tips and practices for developing your mindset

The day will give you an insight into the neuroscience of the brain and how we are hard wired to work together with others, but we also have other motivation systems which pull us in opposite directions.

Come away for a day from the busy-ness, complexities and stresses of your daily leadership role and spend time with Lynn and Norton to reflect on what collaboration is all about.

“Lynn and Norton’s events always leave me thinking and this has been no different.” - Roger Esson

“The masterclasses have given me the ability to increase my awareness of the impact my behaviours can have on others, and vice versa, and I would highly recommend them to anyone working as part of a team where collaboration is essential.”

Dan Wright
