WATTS CONTEMPORARY GALLERY
Art For Sale
Watts Contemporary Gallery sells contemporary artwork to support Watts Gallery Trust’s Art for All programme. Curated exhibitions support and showcase local, new and emerging, and established artists and makers of national and international merit, that resonate with the heritage and ethos of this unique Arts & Crafts site.

The Watts Contemporary programme complements our founding vision of Art for All and the ethos of G F and Mary Watts who were contemporary artists in their own time pushing the boundaries of fine art, craft and design. As well as supporting fellow contemporary artists, the Wattses’ set up a thriving commercial pottery business. The Watts Contemporary Gallery is housed in the original Pottery Building.

Watts Contemporary exhibitions explore different techniques and themes and are interpreted for visitors through storyboards and text panels as well as digital sources. Many exhibitions display exclusive work fulfilling our commitment to support the creation of new artwork.

‘Very well put together show with interesting and enlightening text’
Visitor 2016

‘Beautiful work. I just had to buy one’
Visitor 2015

‘It was a great honour to exhibit at Watts Contemporary Gallery. Not only to have my work in a space steeped in such rich history and in beautiful surroundings, but also in a gallery with great light - it really showed my work at its best’.
FORTHCOMING EXHIBITIONS

In 2017 Watts Contemporary Gallery presented a sell-out show with paintings by Mary Wondrausch OBE. Later this year A Craft Engrained explores wood engravings by Gwen Raverat (1885-1957) and three of the most eminent wood engravers of today.

MARKETING

Exhibitions are supported by a Private View event, promotional material in both print and digital formats, a press release, and marketing campaign throughout the duration of the exhibition. There are opportunities to run themed talks and demonstrations to coincide with an exhibition.

PREVIOUS EXHIBITIONS

In 2014 Watts Contemporary Gallery sold work by Sir Peter Blake in an exhibition Pop Victoriana, lusterware ceramics by Jonathan Chiswell Jones and stunning portraiture by a Compton resident Emma Leone-Palmer.

In 2015 Watts Contemporary Gallery sold watercolours by internationally renowned artist Alexander Creswell and HRH The Prince of Wales, and slipware ceramics by Prue Cooper. An exhibition Prints for the People showcased prints from the Wartime School Prints series and lithographs for Lyons Tea Shops.

In 2016 Linocut Lives On explored this democratic art form and displayed work by old masters such as Edward Bawden as well as ten contemporary artists. On The Silk Road displayed Alexander Creswell’s exquisite series of watercolours created on his 2015 journey to Central Asia.
The Artists' Village was founded by G F Watts and Mary Watts. They shared a creative partnership and ethos of Art for All.

They believed in the transformative potential of art and they campaigned to widen access to art for socially excluded individuals and those living in poverty. Furthermore, they cared deeply about a number of social, cultural and environmental issues which are still relevant today.

The goal of enhancing and transforming people's lives through art is what inspires the work and activities today at Watts Gallery – Artists' Village.

The Watts Contemporary Gallery, which formerly housed Mary Watts’s Compton Pottery, showcases and sells artists’ work in beautifully curated exhibitions in the spirit of Mary Watts’ original commercial activities which supported the picture gallery and apprentices working in the pottery. Today the building showcases the work of subsequent and currently practicing artists who complement the collections and ethos of the Artists’ Village. As an integral part of this remit, Watts Gallery Trust supports contemporary artists in their development and desire to reach new audiences.

The proceeds from the sale of work directly benefits Watts Gallery Trust’s learning and outreach programme which engages over 20,000 participants each year. As an independent charity, this support is vital and has the double dividend of helping artists of the past and present as well as supporting members of the public who wish to engage with art and help current artistic practice thrive.

- Alistair Burtenshaw, Director, Watts Gallery Trust

George Frederic Watts
OM, RA (1817 - 1904) was a celebrated and visionary Victorian Artist, ahead of his time. He was widely considered to be the greatest painter of the Victorian era. A portraitist, sculptor, landscape painter and symbolist, Watts’s work embodied the most pressing themes of the time, earning him the title ‘England’s Michelangelo’. His paintings hang in Tate Britain and the National Portrait Gallery. His fame was not limited to Britain. In 1884 he was the first living artist to have a solo exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, a show so enormously successful that it led to a longer run. At the time of his death, Watts was the most famous artist in England.

Mary Watts
(1849 - 1938) was an exceptional and influential artist in her own right. She studied at Slade and South Kensington School of Art, and whilst living in Compton started to develop her work in craft and design, inspired by the Arts and Craft movement. As a member of the Home Arts Industries Association she led terracotta clay modelling classes for local people in her home studio. A seam of terracotta clay had been found in the grounds of their Compton home. This led to the design and build of Watts Cemetery Chapel and the establishment of a thriving commercial business - The Compton Potters’ Art Guild which successfully operated for 50 years.
