

Bit of Alright Returns: On a Boat!

London, April 16th 2013: Bit of Alright is coming back to London, aboard the Motorschiff Stubnitz! Part festival, part game design conference; Bit of Alright will happen on Friday the 10th of May for the second time. It will take place on the converted East German fishing trawler M.S. Stubnitz, moored at Canary Wharf.

Among the many sessions, presenters will be covering game design, level design, the psychology of audio, physical games, the death of pinball, and building custom hardware. There'll be a host of games playable on board too, ranging from the quiet and still to the extremely physical. There's more to be announced, and all information can be found at www.bit-of-alright.com

Bit of Alright is unlike other games conferences, because there are no rules for sessions: Presenters don't have to give a talk or use slides if they'd rather do something else, or have an idea they think is more interesting.

Tickets are on sale from today (<http://bitofalright2013.eventbrite.com/>). Bit of Alright will be part of a weekend of games events on the Stubnitz, including the Apocalypse Gameshow on the night of the 10th (www.apocalypsegameshow.com), and The Wild Rumpus on the 11th (www.thewildrumpus.co.uk).

Event organiser David Hayward, as well as typing all the words above and below, quotes himself in his own head as saying "I wasn't sure what to expect when I visited Stubnitz. It's absolutely incredible, and the crew are lovely. Stubnitz has a freewheeling atmosphere that's really suited to Bit of Alright".

Wild Rumpus organiser Marie Foulston was approached for comment and said "BOATS!"
