

As a subscriber I am most disappointed that I am supposed to respond to this type of enquiries which confirm that you are aware you are not performing. Rather than going through to this "waste of your client's time" exercise, why don't you just act in accordance with what you already know and start providing realistic price information?

It seems to be taken for granted that people are addicted to completing surveys or at least that they feel flattered if someone pretends their opinion is valuable.

As for me, if I pay for something, I expect quality straight away.

This is more about the NaOH/PVC area than ethylene.
