Elrow finally comes to Leeds – Preview

Posted on 7th March 2019 by The Gryphon Web Editor

Renowned across the globe, Elrow’s ‘El Triangulo de las Rowmudas’ is finally set to come to Leeds this Saturday.

So what can we expect? Well, with the likes of Melé and Marc Maya headlining the event, expect to be transported out of dreary England into the golden sands and the sunny skies of a tropical island.

The iconic Elrow bird has been dancing around Canal Mills, enticing all Leeds students to come and join in the fun for the UK premier of Elrow Rowmudas.

Elrow prides itself on its fully immersive experiences and Rowmudas will be no different. Far from the Canal Mills you know and love, the whole warehouse space will transform into “a wild fiesta of full of shipwrecks”, including elaborate decorations and over the top spectacles.

The amazing legacy that Elrow have already built for themselves was seen by the overwhelming response to the Sunday event, but luckily they added another date, so even more people can get to enjoy; it’s set to be an Elrow-filled weekend extravaganza. Although expectations are sky high, I’m certain the 40 quid ticket will not disappoint.

Starting at 3pm, party goers are all hoping for clear skies and maybe even some of the February sun we’ve been relishing in over the past week.

The organisers have dubbed the event “THE PARTY OF ETERNAL HAPPINESS™”, so with that attitude of confidence, there is no way this will disappoint.

Below are the scenes from Rowmudas in Ibiza; a little taster of what the weekend will bring. We all know that Leeds goes harder than anyone, so expect bigger and better things from all involved... and see you Saturday!

Flick Open Theatre Society

Preview: AJ Tracey, 07.04.19

Wire’s 13th Birthday with Midland – Review

Labour Clarity On Brexit: Corbyn Seizes People’s Vote

Summat: Leeds’ Community Festival of Resistance

Freya Hillyer

Posted in Clubs, In The Middle, Previews, Uncategorized   Tagged Canal Mills, clubs, Elrow, Freya Hillyer, in the middle