Benefits of NHSmail Skype for Business

-  The NHSmail service is approved for clinical use and is the national collaboration platform designed for health and care
-  Improved efficiency and ways of working. Use Skype for Business Meetings to improve communication and collaboration between teams, departments and across organisational boundaries
-  New users will require little training as Skype for Business is easy and intuitive to use with a similar look to the consumer version of Skype

Audio and Video calls and conferencing (Top-up Services)

-  Connect with peers one-to-one via audio or video call
-  Collaborate with up to 250 people via audio or video conferencing
-  Quickly schedule meetings with flexible access management for additional security control
-  Work collaboratively on documents through desktop and application sharing
-  Draft ideas together using a shared whiteboarding space

-  Virtual teams can work from where they are, whenever they need it. Stay in touch, share information, and make clinical decisions quicker by enabling teams to connect through the free mobile application
-  Improved quality of care through real-time access to expertise. Use video calls to enable coaching and consultation via video link
-  Organisations can federate local Skype instances with NHSmail, enabling seamless presence, instant messaging and audio/video functionality between users of NHSmail and those using Skype on O365 / deployed locally
