ISSUE No. 6 OCTOBER 1988 FREE

IT'S LIFE, MAGGIE

BUT NOT AS YOU

KNOW IT

In June of this year a report was published by Amnesty International which revealed a disturbing picture of the administration of justice in northern Ireland.

Amnesty International is a worldwide movement which is independent of any government, political persuasion or religious creed. It has more than 700,000 members, subscribers and supporters in over 150 countries. It has formal relations with the United Nations and other world bodies.

This 90 page document is an impartial investigation into the various killings by security forces and also studies of the "Supergrass" trials of the early 1980's. It goes into considerable detail, in particular to the 1982 killings in Armagh and the subsequent investigation by Manchester Deputy Chief Constable, John Stalker which the British Government has refused to publish on grounds of national security.

"A series of fatal shootings by security forces raises critical questions about the administration of justice in Northern Ireland. Security forces shot dead six unarmed people in three incidents during late 1982. The circumstances of these killings give rise to allegations of a deliberate policy at some official level to eliminate rather than arrest suspected members of armed opposition groups. Royal Ulster Constabulary officers falsified and concealed information crucial to investigation of the disputed killings."

Amnesty have made a number of recommendations which if implemented would improve the level of justice and help to allay public fear and suspicion. This is a well researched report which is fair and impartial.

It should be read by all people interested in achieving peace through justice in Ireland. The report can be bought from Amnesty International, Irish Section, 8, Shaw St, off Pearse Street, Dublin 2. The price is IR£4.00 Including postage. Amnesty welcomes new members.

INSIDE OUT

On the 27th July 1988 the first performance of "Inside Out" was given in Derry. It was the culmination of six weeks work which had brought together in a single project, sculpture, drama and lyric workshops established in the depressed communities of the Bogside and Creggan. The response to the play and exhibition has been overwhelmingly positive and it was decided to tour the production of "Inside Out" around Ireland during the month of October 1988.

Co-ordinated by Derry sculptor Locky Morris and Manchester playwright Dan Baron Cohen, with two other persons responsible for publicity and production, nine young people f formed themselves into two linked groups: BOGSIDE SCULPTORS and DERRY FRONTLINE. Through a collaboration with experienced co-ordinators and by using tested methods of democratic discussion and collective experiment, these young people worked together in acquiring cultural skills and independence, and began to realise their own potential.

"Inside Out" boldly combines sculpture, drama and lyrics to attempt to analyse life in Ireland. The pregnancy of a fifteen year old girl triggers a series of difficult arguments which question the social, moral and political climate of present day Derry. Against a background of imprisonment and conflict, two young people are forced to examine why women are locked inside the home and how people are locked within an apparently endless present. By asking uneasy questions about responsibility, the play unleashes a new clarity and determination. With the frustration of the unspeakable out in the open, the play argues that people themselves must be the makers of their own values, their history and future.

Through this project, young people have cut through the silence, despair and entrenched attitudes which have prevented them from transforming their experience into knowledges of affirm-ation and change. It is vital that other audiences are given the opportunity to see this work which, although is rooted in the experience of life in Derry, raises questions and issues relevant throughout Ireland.
"Inside Out" will be performed at the Triskel Centre, Tobin Street, beside Christ Church on Friday 14th and Saturday 15th October at 8.30pm. Admission £1.50 and £2.00. Workshops and a photographic exhibition will also be held.
