We are in danger of becoming a nation of incurable romantics

The graph does not include figures for people with AIDS Related Complex (ARC).
For every person diagnosed with Aids and still surviving, there are probably three more people who are receiving support and treatment for ARC. Include them with these figures and the total number of people in need of care rises to well over 7000 people.

Government's reported numbers of people diagnosed with aids in UK

2017.21.5.1.609

To be told you will die from an incurable disease is shattering.

Living with it afterwards can be even worse.

AIDS and AIDS Related Complex (ARC) are advanced stages of HIV infection. You can't catch HIV from shaking hands or kissing, yet many people with AIDS and ARC have lost their jobs, their homes, their friends - even their families and other people who are close to them.

We at FRONTLINERS are living with AIDS and ARC 24 hours every day, and really understand the many problems. Because we are living successfully with them, we know we can help other people to do so too.

At FRONTLINERS we offer help and advice on financial problems, welfare benefits, housing issues, and information about treatments. We help other diagnosed people to understand the physical and emotional effects of living with AIDS and ARC. Most of all we provide the emotional optimism that many people with AIDS and ARC so often need.

AT FRONTLINERS WE ARE INCURABLY OPTIMISTIC

If you'd like to offer financial help, or volunteer some time to help people with AIDS and ARC lead optimistic lives, or if you need support and advice yourself, please contact:

FRONT LINERS

The Frontliners Centre, 55 Farringdon Road, London EC1 3JB
Tel: 071 430 1199 Answerphone: 071 404 4324 Fax: 071 404 5609

Original Concept: J. Walter Thompson Company Limited. Print generously donated by Battley Bros. Printers SW4 0JN