INSURANCE BROKER (SECTION 34D(1) GEWO*)

These days there are numerous ways for persons requiring insurance – whether corporate or private – to conclude a contract. One such way is to obtain advice from and use the brokerage services of an insurance broker. Unlike other sales channels, insurance brokers are not bound to any insurance provider, which makes them fully independent partners. This is why they are also referred to as "impartial champions" of your insurance interests. In other words: Insurance brokers are on your side. Information about insurance brokerage fees

As an insurance broker, we offer professional advice.
The fees for our advice, brokerage and guidance services – also known as commission – are paid by the insurance provider as standard.

The commission forms part of the insurance premium.
Differing terms must be expressly agreed between us and the customer. When brokering "net products" in particular, a separate remuneration agreement is normally signed that obligates the customer to pay the fees. Net products are products where the brokerage fees are not included in the insurance premium. Our company does not receive remuneration in the form of other benefits.

MORE INFORMATION

The EU Insurance Mediation Directive states that the insurance customer is responsible for notifying the broker in good time of any changes in their personal circumstances, e.g. change of bank account details, marriage, children, moving house, secondment abroad for work, divorce, self-employment, founding a company entered in the commercial register, etc. Only then are we able to take responsibility for the accuracy and completeness of your insurance and pension.
