Manager Commentary

Recovery by the Russian currency made April a good month for local assets denominated in US dollars, but the ruble-denominated MICEX Index was mostly flat. The overall trend is up, but Russian markets are vulnerable to external shocks in May as Western equity markets look ripe for correction. Different Russian assets will move in different directions in the near future, depending on currency denomination (ruble or dollar) and whether they are oriented to the domestic or export market. Upcoming dividend record dates and high oil prices will offer support, but Ukraine remains an underlying negative factor.

In April we sold GDRs of Lukoil and Novatek as well as local shares of Surgutneftegaz and Metafrax. We bought shares of the automaker Sollers.
