Manager Commentary

The beginning of March was disastrous for the Russian stock market, which was a hostage of the confrontation between Russia and the West over Ukraine. Nerves ran high through the first half of the month and there was a mass exit by foreign investors from Russian shares and bonds. The market recovered a large part of its losses at the end of March and in early April thanks to softer than expected Western sanctions and overall detente over Ukraine. We believe that Russian stocks bottomed in March and will gradually recover through the rest of the year. However, there will be much volatility and the market will probably be range bound in the near term. We speculated with Lukoil GDRs, bought Novatek, halved our position in Norilsk Nickel and bought prefs of Surgutneftegaz in March.
