Manager Commentary

Russian shares fell in October for no apparent reason, despite rising oil prices and strong global markets. The continued threat of new US sanctions may have played a role, damping optimism on the Russian market, but recent actions from the US have been relatively mild and investors in Russian shares have learned to live with such risk.

Meanwhile, western markets continued their bullish trend despite expectations of a FED rate hike in December and the political upsets in Spain. We remain conservative on risk assets in the medium term.

We sold shares of Amgen Inc. and bought GDRs of Rosneft during October.
