Manager Commentary

Global equity markets plummeted again in June amid fears of trade wars provoked by US tariff policy. Emerging market currencies, including the ruble, also suffered. Some of the equity losses were recovered by the end of the month, and growth continued in early July as investors chose to focus on still strong economic fundamentals rather than political games between the US and China.

The Russian market is currently navigating the dividend season while the US market is focused on quarterly earnings.

We bought GDRs of Gazprom in June.
