ENERGY DRINKS

BY: ERIS MARIE

What are some of the best and worst energy drinks? When you wake up and go to school, half your brain is still asleep, so per usual, you'll look for a way to gain energy, or if you're like me, you go to sleep in class. Celsius, Monsters, Bang, Red Bull, and Alani's are all very popular energy drinks that have unlimited flavors and varieties, but the question of which energy drink to buy differs. It gets you wondering which one is the healthiest and which one would give me the most energy. As you keep reading this review, you'll find out which energy drink will provide the best energy for you that's also healthy.

So to start, I woke up, got ready, and drank a 10-calorie, zero-sugar Arctic Vibe Celsius in the car on my way to school. By the middle of 1st period, I was energized and fully woken up. This Celsius was good, and the flavor was really great. The benefits of Clesius include Riboflavin, Niacin, Pantothenic Acid, Vitamin B6, Vitamin B12, and Biotin. I know I said a lot, but research from MD Linx tells us all of these support hair and skin health, promote a fast metabolism, support energy and hormonal production, support brain health and normal immune system function, and, lastly, support red blood cell formation. So, knowing the benefits was good, but in every energy drink, there's a catch. One can of Celsius contains 200mg of caffeine, which is about double the amount in a regular cup of coffee. It also holds Guarana seed extract, which makes the caffeine amount more than 200mg. And it includes Sucralose, which is an artificial Sweetener that's been associated with potential issues like gut health disruption and negative effects on blood sugar regulation. After all of this information, I would still recommend Celsius, just not on a day-to-day basis. One degree Celsius a week is just enough, so I'll rate it an 8/10.

Although this wasn't mentioned, the next energy drink is a Yerba Mate. Yerba Mate is a popular high caffeinated South American herbal drink made from the dried leaves and stems of the Ilex paraguariensis holly tree. I know that's a lot, so to put it in simple terms, Yerba Mate is one of the most down-to-earth sources of energy. Now you're probably asking if they taste good or if they even give you energy since it's from a plant, and the answer is yes! Waking up, getting to school, and absolutely downing a Yerba Mate gives me a boost of energy for a good 3 hours, which isn't a lot, but it still gets me through class. The best way I can describe a Yerba Mate is as a gentle, focused alertness rather than the sharp spike and crash of coffee. The Benefits are good for heart health by improving cholesterol, aiding in weight loss by increasing metabolism, and providing anti-inflammatory effects. Now the cons of Yerba Mate are pretty extreme, but they're only if you have long-term or heavy consumption. Mayo Clinic tells us that It Increases risk of cancer (mouth, throat, esophagus, lungs), insomnia, and high blood pressure, which is kind of insane, so just for that, I'll rate a Yerba Mate a 5/10.

ARE TRENDING "HEALTHY" DRINKS LIKE OLIPOP, POPPI, AND BLOOM ACTUALLY BETTER FOR STUDENTS THAN REGULAR SODAS, OR ARE THEY MOSTLY JUST MARKETING HYPE?

Review

By: Asia Brown

Have you ever walked into a store, seen colorful cans labeled "healthy soda," and wondered if they're actually good for you, or just really good advertising? Drinks like Olipop, Poppi, and Bloom have taken over social media, especially on TikTok, where influencers promise better gut health, less sugar, and all the fun of soda without the guilt. For students who want something sweet and refreshing but don't want the crash that comes with regular soda, these drinks sound almost too good to be true. After trying all three and looking at what they actually offer, I believe students should try Olipop, can occasionally drink Poppi, and should probably skip Bloom. While these drinks are healthier than regular soda in some ways, not all of them live up to the hype, and some are clearly better choices than others. First, Olipop is the best option because it actually combines good taste with real health benefits. One of the main reasons is that Olipop contains prebiotics, which help feed the good bacteria already living in your gut. According to Olipop, each person has a "multi-trillion-sized army" of helpful bacteria that help with digestion, immunity, and metabolism. By feeding those bacteria, Olipop supports gut health in a way regular soda never could. Another reason Olipop stands out is its fiber content. The average American gets only about 10-15 grams of fiber per day, far less than recommended. Olipop helps fill that gap while still tasting like a treat. Finally, the flavors actually taste like real soda. Options like Shirley Temple and Crisp Apple are sweet, bubbly, and satisfying, so students don't feel like they're sacrificing taste to be healthier. Because it offers both strong health benefits and enjoyable flavors, Olipop is definitely worth trying. Next, Poppi is a decent alternative, but it's not as impressive as Olipop. One reason Poppi is still a better choice than regular soda is that it contains prebiotics from cassava root fiber and agave inulin. These ingredients support gut health and provide benefits that normal soda doesn't. Poppi also includes apple cider vinegar, which is known for helping digestion and balancing blood sugar levels. Another reason Poppi is a good option is that it has less sugar than regular soda, which can help students avoid energy crashes during school. However, Poppi isn't perfect. Some flavors taste strange or too artificial, almost like kombucha mixed with candy. Also, it doesn't have as much fiber as Olipop, which means the gut health benefits aren't as strong. Because of this, Poppi is fine as an occasional choice, but it's not the best healthy soda available. Finally, Bloom is the weakest option and feels more like marketing hype than a true soda replacement. Bloom uses a special prebiotic fiber called PreticX™ XOS, which is supposed to improve gut health without causing bloating. While that sounds impressive, the experience doesn't match the promise. One problem is the taste. The flavors are often too subtle, bland, or strange, which makes it less enjoyable to drink. Another issue is that it doesn't feel satisfying like soda. Students looking for something fun and refreshing may feel disappointed. Even though Bloom claims to help metabolism and gut balance, it doesn't provide the same strong fiber content or enjoyable experience as Olipop. Because of this, Bloom doesn't feel worth the price or the hype. In conclusion, healthy sodas like Olipop, Poppi, and Bloom show that soda alternatives can be better for students than regular soda, but not all of them are equal. Olipop is the clear winner because it supports gut health, contains helpful fiber, and tastes great. Poppi is a decent second choice, offering some benefits but not as many. Bloom, however, doesn't live up to its promises and isn't as enjoyable or effective. Students who want a healthier soda should definitely try Olipop, consider Poppi occasionally, and skip Bloom. These drinks prove that healthier options exist, but it's important to choose wisely and not fall for marketing alone.

Probiotic Soads

"Healthy sodas" like Olipop, Poppi, and Bloom promise better gut health, less sugar, and a smarter alternative to regular soda. But which one actually lives up to the hype?

Olipop

- Contains prebiotics that feed good gut bacteria
- Has 9g of fiber per can (most regular sodas have 0g)
- Helps support digestion, immunity, and metabolism
- Much lower sugar than traditional soda
- Flavors taste similar to real soda (Vintage Cola, Strawberry Vanilla)
- Helps increase daily fiber intake (most Americans only get 10–15g daily)

Why it stands out: Combines real health benefits with great taste

Poppi

- Contains prebiotics (cassava root fiber + agave inulin)
- Includes apple cider vinegar (may support digestion)
- Lower sugar than regular soda
- Usually 2g of fiber per can (less than Olipop)
- Some flavors taste artificial or overly sweet

Best for: Occasional healthy soda option.

Bloom

- Uses PreticX™ XOS prebiotic fiber
- Claims to support gut health and metabolism
- Lower sugar than regular soda
- aste is often described as bland or unsatisfying
- Does not contain as much fiber as Olipop
- Feels less like real soda

Biggest downside: Doesn't feel as satisfying or flavorful for the price.

SENIOR YEAR MOVIES VS. REALITY

Review

Dylan Carter

Senior year has a reputation long before you ever reach it. By the time students become seniors, they've already seen the movie version, slow-motion hallways, perfect final moments, and a sense that everything is finally supposed to make sense. Movies and TV shows present it as the emotional peak of high school, the year where prom feels symbolic, final games carry extra weight, and goodbyes mean something more. And to be fair, some of those moments do happen. But the media often compresses senior year into only those highlights, leaving out the long stretches of routine, pressure, and uncertainty that define the experience just as much. Because of this imbalance, high school movies and shows should be viewed as entertainment rather than accurate representations of senior year.

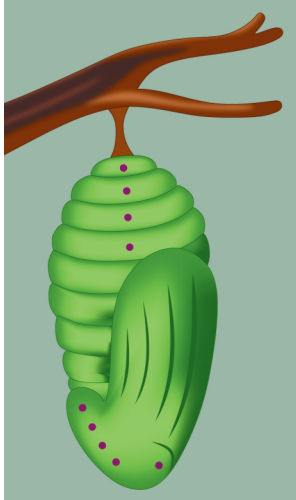

One reason these portrayals fall short is that they turn senior year into a near-constant highlight reel. Films like High School Musical 3, She's All That, and American Pie focus almost entirely on major events such as prom, big social moments, and symbolic endings. While those experiences are real and meaningful, they make up only a small portion of senior year. As a current senior, much of the year so far has been dominated by everyday classes, college applications, and academic pressure. This isn't just a personal experience, conversations with classmates consistently reveal the same pattern. The meaningful moments exist, but they are surrounded by stress, repetition, and waiting for what comes next, details that movies rarely show. Another way media misrepresents senior year is by portraying seniors as confident, carefree, and fully aware of who they are. Movies like Ferris Bueller's Day Off and Dazed and Confused suggest that by senior year, students have figured themselves out and earned a sense of freedom. In reality, many seniors feel the opposite. Anxiety about post-graduation plans, burnout from years of school, and pressure from family and teachers often outweigh feelings of confidence. Films like Lady Bird, Booksmart, and The Edge of Seventeen, along with shows like Never Have I Ever, offer a more balanced portrayal by showing insecurity, emotional conflict, and uncertainty alongside meaningful moments.

Ultimately, senior year doesn't need to look like a movie to matter. While high school media captures some truths, it oversimplifies the experience by focusing only on the highlights. Recognizing this difference allows students to appreciate senior year for what it really is, imperfect, overwhelming at times, and quietly meaningful in ways that don't always translate to the screen. Senior year isn't powerful because it wraps everything up neatly, but it's powerful because it reminds you that even without a scripted ending, you're still moving forward, carrying moments that matter, and stepping into whatever comes next, with hope, resilience, and growing independence ahead.

SENIOR YEAR
MOVIES VS REALITY

Movies & Shows

- Constant big, dramatic moments.
- Prom and graduation as emotional peaks.
- Confident, carefree seniors Clear identities and figured-out futures.
- Big speeches and perfect endings.
- Senior year as the "best year"

Reality

- Classes, homework, and deadlines
- College applications and decisions
- Stress, pressure, and uncertainty
- Waiting for what comes next
- Small everyday moments that matter

Why This Difference Matters

- Creates unrealistic expectations
- Makes seniors feel pressure to "live up" to the hype
- Overlooks stress and emotional uncertainty

The Real Takeaway

- Senior year doesn't have to look perfect
- Meaning exists beyond big milestones
- Growth happens in ordinary moments
- It's powerful even without a scripted ending

DEXTER DARK PASSENGER OR DARK DEFENDER

Review

Kameron Clay

Dexter is a crime drama that questions whether its ok for one man to be trained to take the law into his own hands and the value of human life. It shows this with the main protagonist, Dexter Morgan, who seems to be normal on the outside, working as a blood spatter analyst for the Miami Metro Police Department, but secretly works ritualistically, taking out the criminals who escape the law.

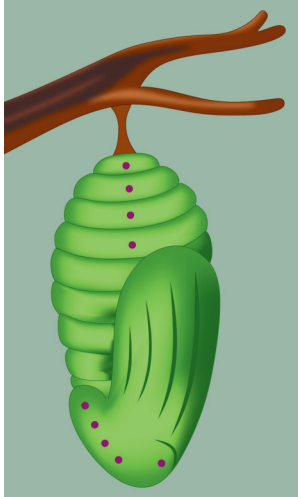

Dexter was raised by a detective named Harrison Morgan with a younger sister, Debra. His father, Harry new of a traumatic event that Dexter went through that changed him forever, and when he found out that Dexter, from a young age, had the urge to kill decided to train him. Harry gave Dexter a code that he would go on to life by for the rest of his life in order to allow him to fulfill his urges without getting caught. At the beginning of the story, Dexter believes himself to be completely empty, feeling nothing but the urge to kill, and that the only thing he can do is train himself to track down and kill other killers in order to keep his urges under control.

Although Dexter clearly isn't purely evil, he is also shown to objectively not be a good person or a dark hero like some people try to make him out to be. There are multiple examples of people getting hurt only because of Dexter and getting involved in his secret life. James Doakes, another Detective who was always suspicious of Dexter, ended up being killed by Lila West, a woman who was in love with Dexter after being framed by Dexter for his crimes of being the Bay Harbour Butcher. Another clear example is his wife Rita Morgan and son Harrison Morgan. Dexter, while hunting a serial killer who's been undetected for over 30 years while seemingly having the perfect happy family, and after finding out who Dexter really was, ended up murdering his wife in front of their infant son, Harrison.

LULU AND ACE

Review

Jacob dorantes

The film Paid in Full,, explores the rise and fall of young men involved in the Harlem drug trade during the 1980s. While much of the film focuses on Ace, Mitch, and Rico, an early but critical moment is the death of Lulu, a powerful drug dealer. Lulu's murder is significant because it establishes the dangerous tone of the film, foreshadows later events, and introduces the idea that power in the drug game is always temporary. By witnessing Lulu's death at the start of his career, Ace is exposed early to the reality that success in this world comes with inevitable consequences. Lulu's death sets the tone for the rest of Paid in Full by making it clear that no one in the drug trade is untouchable.

Lulu's death immediately establishes the violent and unstable nature of the drug game. Lulu is presented as a respected and well-connected dealer, someone who appears to have control and authority. However, his sudden murder over drugs shows how quickly that control can disappear. This moment sends a clear message to the audience that status and experience do not guarantee safety. The film does not romanticize Lulu's power; instead, it dismantles it in an instant. This sets a serious tone early in the film and signals that violence is an unavoidable part of this lifestyle. From that point forward, the audience understands that success in the drug trade is fragile and short-lived.

In addition to establishing tone, Lulu's death functions as foreshadowing for later events in the film, particularly the fate of Mitch. Both Lulu and Mitch are high-level dealers who become careless and overly confident, believing their reputation will protect them. Lulu's murder serves as an early warning of what happens when power is mistaken for invincibility. Mitch's eventual downfall mirrors Lulu's fate, reinforcing the film's message that the drug game follows a repeating cycle of violence. By placing Lulu's death at the beginning, the film prepares the audience for the tragic outcomes that follow, making those later deaths feel inevitable rather than shocking.

Sheet: 16

mixam the smart way to print

mixamcom - Assets Server on 2026-02-26, 21:04 order: 1939647 [8.50" X 11.00"]

Lulu's death is also significant because Ace witnesses it at the start of his "career," shaping his mindset throughout the film. Seeing a powerful dealer killed so early teaches Ace that the drug game has strict rules and deadly consequences. Unlike Mitch, who becomes reckless, Ace attempts to move more cautiously, constantly aware of the risks involved. Lulu's death lingers in the background of Ace's rise, influencing his decisions and reinforcing his fear of ending up the same way. This moment helps explain Ace's character development and why he is more focused on survival than ego or reputation.

Ultimately, Lulu's death sets the tone for Paid in Full by establishing danger, foreshadowing future tragedies, and shaping Ace's understanding of the drug world. It serves as a warning that power in the drug trade is temporary and that violence is unavoidable. Through this early moment, the film challenges the idea of fast money and exposes the harsh reality behind the illusion of control. Lulu's death reminds viewers that in this world, success is never permanent–and the cost is often fatal.

DISNEYLAND FOOD

Review

Lauren Goldfarb

Many people believe Disneyland food is overpriced and overrated, but I strongly believe that following a good guide on Disneyland foods can make it absolutely worth it. Whether going on a fun trip with family or friends or going on your Grad Nite trip, knowing which foods are truly worth buying can make the entire experience so much better and prevent wasting money on disappointing options. By evaluating taste, price, presentation, and overall enjoyment, it becomes clear that while not every item is a hit, certain iconic foods still very much live up to the hype and are must-tries!

One reason students should experience Disneyland food is because some unique snacks deliver exceptional flavor, such as the Cheesy Garlic Pretzel Bread from Maurice's Treats ($7.49) which is located in the Fantasy Faire area of Fantasyland. This snack is a pretzel bread filled with cheesy garlic spread and served with marinara sauce. TikTok creator Bethany Vinson describes it as "probably the best snack I've ever had at Disneyland," explaining how cheesy and buttery it tastes without being greasy (Vinson, TikTok). Similarly, creator Kiyana.ebrahimi calls it her favorite food of the day, while Megan the Magical Millennial labels it "one of the best snacks in the park." These consistent reactions from multiple reviewers show strong evidence that this snack is worth the price and lives up to its popularity.

Disneyland food is also worth trying is because of iconic treats that offer refreshing enjoyment, especially during long and hot days in the park. The Pineapple Dole Whip Treat ($7.29) at the Tiki Juice Bar located in Adventureland is one of the most famous Disneyland snacks for bursting-with-fruit flavor and creamy soft-serve texture. According to Sun News Daily, the pineapple flavor perfectly balances sweetness and tanginess while avoiding having an artificial taste, and rated the dessert a 10/10 rating (Sun News Daily, 2025). Additionally, Hungry Huy explains that the light and refreshing dessert makes it an ideal treat for hot days (Hungry Huy). It's wide-spread popularity, availability at multiple park locations, and amazing reviews makes the Pineapple Dole Whip a true crowd pleaser.

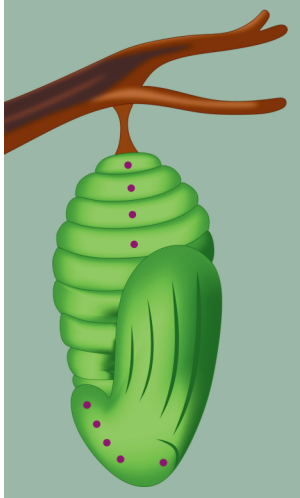

However, not all Disneyland foods are universally loved, which is why knowing what to expect before going is important. The Chieftain Chicken and Banyan Beef Skewers ($14.50) from Bengal Barbecue located in Adventureland is a very controversial option. Cuisine and Travel praises the skewers for being flavorful and diet-friendly, especially for people looking for gluten-free or low-carb options. However, Hungry Huy criticizes the skewers for being dry and overpriced. Even TikTok reviews are divided, with Alexis Oakley calling the beef skewer "one of the best foods" she's had in a while, while That Foodie Lyss found the beef too tough for her taste. This contrast shows that some foods might not be for everyone, so it's helpful to know what you're getting before spending money on pricier items.

Overall, Disneyland food is worth experiencing when you know what to order. If you're looking for a treat you are guaranteed to enjoy, the Cheesy Garlic Pretzel Bread and Pineapple Dole Whip are two options that consistently live up to the hype and are well worth the money. For more debated items like the Bengal Barbecue skewers, it is smart to know that the opinions vary, so a good idea is choosing specific skewers you think you would enjoy the most as well as sharing with friends. With these recommendations in mind, you can confidently plan your food choices and make the most out of your Disneyland or Grad Nite Experience!

WHY HELLO KITTY ISLAND ADVENTURE IS THE PERFECT COZY GAME

Review

Brooke Williams

After a long day at school, work, or sports, everyone wants to go home and relax without having to worry about anything stress-related. A lot of popular games now are fast-paced, competitive, and can be overwhelming. That's where Hello Kitty Island Adventure stands out with popular characters like Hello Kitty, Cinnamorol, My Melody, Keroppi, Chococat, Kuromi, and more. This game is a chill, relaxing, cozy, and fun game for anyone. I think everyone should experience this game, especially students or anyone who needs a break from stressful activities and just wants something chill to do.

One reason to play Hello Kitty Island Adventure is that it is a stress-free game that allows players to move at their own pace. The game has no time limits on tasks, so players don't feel rushed. They can also stop the game whenever they want and save their progress. During the tasks, there is no specific order when completing them, which also gives players complete freedom. This makes the game relaxing because there is no pressure when playing, and players can finish doing whatever they want on their own time. In addition, a review on Reddit, "multi-player: best of any cozy game I have ever played, hands down. plenty to do, plenty to keep you having fun. spent half the day today with a friend leveling up our friendship (which you can do with as many friends as you want). It was a ton of fun."

Another reason to play Hello Kitty Island Adventure is that it encourages more creativity than having to beat someone in a game. It allows you to decorate the island, customize your character, decorate houses around the island with different types of furniture, allowing personal expression, and there isn't a right or wrong or consequences, so players can play freely. The game has no consequences for creative choices, meaning that players are not judged or punished for the way that they want to play. There are no scores, rankings, or competitions that make them feel like they have to be at the top. Because of this, the players can relax and just enjoy themselves while playing.

Finally, I recommended Hello Kitty Island Adventure because it focuses on building friendships and positive relationships, which makes the game feel meaningful instead of just entertaining. In the game, players interact with the Sanrio characters and can strengthen friendships by completing quests and giving gifts to characters. As the friendships grow, players unlock quest get rewards, which can make the progress of the game exciting and rewarding. The game is not so competitive, so the focus is more on kindness, cooperation, and helping the characters around the island. Because of this, the friendships grow over time, and players feel connected to the game. Overall, Hello Kitty Island Adventure is a relaxing, creative, and enjoyable game that anyone can experience. Its stress free gameplay that gives freedom to players to express themselves and gives people something to do that's both peaceful and fun, making it a great way to unwind after a long or stressful day. Instead of focusing on whether they are going to win or having to rush, players can enjoy the game at their own pace. This makes Hello Kitty Island Adventure a comforting experience that I believe everyone should enjoy.

HALF BLOOD Review

Half Blood (2025)

Jeffery Smith

Music usually feels temporary. Songs trend, go viral for a week, and disappear. Half Blood by Slayr does the opposite. From the first moments of the album, it sounds like something built with intention, not rushed for attention. Every transition, beat, and vocal performance feels like it came from someone who cared about the final product, not just the numbers. Because of the effort, identity, and listening experience this album delivers, and the real success that followed, listeners should experience Half Blood.

For readers unfamiliar with Slayr or this style of music, he comes from the underground scene, where artists build fanbases online rather than through radio or big labels. This genre is known for high energy, distorted production, and emotional intensity. However, what separates great underground projects from average ones is polish and vision. Half Blood is not just a collection of loud songs; it plays like a complete body of work, designed to be heard all the way through. That level of detail is part of what helped Slayr grow from 30,000 monthly listeners to over 471,000 at the moment and eventually land a performance spot at Rolling Loud. That kind of jump shows this album was a turning point, not just another drop.

The first reason you should listen to this album is the level of care put into its structure and transitions. Many artists in this scene release songs that feel disconnected, but Half Blood flows smoothly from track to track. Every single song has a transition that is creative and sometimes unexpected, which keeps the listener engaged instead of skipping. One of the most recognizable transitions is from Holding to Death by MP3. This shows planning, not randomness. Also, the track order feels intentional. The energy rises and falls in a way that makes the album feel like an experience rather than a playlist. That kind of structure proves time and thought went into how the music would be heard.

The second reason is the consistency and identity of the sound. From start to finish, the production style feels focused. The beats are aggressive but controlled, and the mixing allows Slayr's voice to stand out instead of getting lost. His vocal delivery is confident and intense, which matches the production. In addition, the energy level rarely drops. Even when songs shift moods, they still feel like they belong to the same world. This consistency makes the album memorable because listeners can recognize his style after just a few tracks. Artists do not develop that kind of identity overnight; it comes from time spent refining their craft.

The third reason is the emotional intensity and replay value, which connects directly to the album's impact. Slayr performs with urgency, making the music feel alive instead of robotic. You can hear effort in how he attacks certain lines and rides the beats. That passion translates into songs that hit hard even after multiple listens. Also, the strong hooks and dramatic production moments make tracks stick in your head. Replay value matters because it turns casual listeners into real fans, which helps explain the major increase in his audience after this project.

Overall, Half Blood stands out because it combines energy with effort and style with structure. It proves that when an artist takes their time and puts passion into the details, the final result feels different. The growth in his listeners and his move onto major stages show that the work behind this album paid off in real opportunities. Listeners who want to hear an underground project that sounds purposeful, polished, and powerful should absolutely give this album a chance.

What boba spot offers the best brown sugar milk tea based on flavor, quality, and overall experience?

Anabelle De La Torre

In a city like Los Angeles, where boba shops are everywhere, deciding where to go can feel overwhelming. From study breaks to late-night cravings, boba has become part of everyday life. Looking beyond sweetness and presentation, it becomes easier to recognize what separates an average shop from one that consistently delivers quality, value, and care. The question is which boba shop offers the best overall experience when it comes to drinks, quality, pricing, and atmosphere? After comparing Boba Time and Sunright Tea Studio with other shops, I believe Sunright Tea Studio stands out for quality and atmosphere, while Boba Time stands out for pricing and variety. Overall, I recommend both shops, but for different reasons depending on what the customer is looking for.

One major reason to visit Sunright Tea Studio is its high-quality ingredients. Sunright explains that their "tea leaves are cultivated in mountaintop farms, where the plants soak in the essence of the sun and absorb the nourishment of the misty, evening rain" (Sunright Tea Studio). This shows the shop focuses on authenticity and craftsmanship rather than just sweetness. Their signature Sunright Boba Milk Tea is brewed with Ceylon black tea, blended with house milk, and topped with freshly made brown sugar syrup and chewy boba. When I tried their brown sugar milk tea, the tea flavor tasted strong and real instead of watered down, and the boba was soft and fresh, not hard or overly chewy. This makes Sunright different from shops that rely heavily on powders and syrups.

Another reason Sunright is worth visiting is its atmosphere and service. Sunright describes its stores as a welcoming space for quality time with loved ones and a cozy spot for afternoon tea. On their website, they state, "The sunny theme of Sunright isn't limited to the atmosphere in our stores" (Sunright Tea Studio). When I visited, the store was clean, modern, and calm, and the staff were friendly and patient. The shop felt more like a café than a fast-food drink place, which made the experience feel special instead of rushed. The staff were efficient in preparing my drink in a timely manner, but they did not rush in a way that lowered the quality. It's Boba Time, however, stands out for pricing and variety. Compared to other boba shops, It's Boba Time is more affordable, with many drinks costing around $5.50 to $7.50, which makes it a good option for students. Boba Time also offers "more than 140 drinks, It's Boba Time is a place where everyone in your party can enjoy the drink they love!"(It's Boba Time). Their menu includes milk teas, slushes, smoothies, and coffee-based drinks, with customizable sweetness, ice levels, and toppings. One customer review states, ""It's Boba Time" is the ultimate spot for all things refreshingly delicious! This regional chain offers a wide array of bubble tea, fresh juices, smoothies, and more. The boba drinks are a must-try, and the flavors are endless. The staff is always welcoming, and the service is quick. Whether you're in the mood for a classic or something unique, they've got you covered."(Yelp review). When I went to Boba Time, I liked the variety of choices, and how easy it was to find something new. The portions were also a good size, which makes it a good value for the price.

The staff is very efficient and patient throughout the experience, and the options are made to cater to everyone's preferences.

Do High Schools Focus Too Much on College and Not Enough on Life Skills?

Opinion

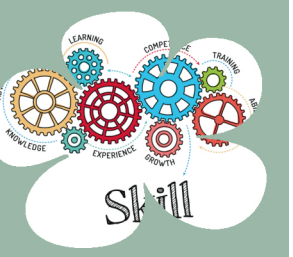

Brandon Dunn

Imagine graduating high school with a perfect GPA but no idea how to file taxes, build credit, or cook a healthy meal. For many students, this is reality. High schools place heavy emphasis on college preparation, standardized testing, and GPA performance, yet often fail to teach the practical life skills students need to function independently. While academic achievement is important, schools should prioritize life skills alongside college readiness so students graduate prepared for adulthood, not just applications.

One major issue is that high schools value academic credentials more than functional independence. Students spend years preparing for exams and admissions requirements, yet many leave unsure how to manage money, insurance, or other basic responsibilities. A 2025 survey by K12 and Parents Magazine found that 32% of recent graduates felt completely unprepared for the “real world,” and 59% said they were not ready to handle essential financial tasks like filing taxes or building credit. The National Financial Educators Council also reports that financial illiteracy costs Americans thousands of dollars annually due to poor decision-making and debt mismanagement. These findings suggest that while schools may produce graduates, they do not always produce capable adults.

The intense focus on grades and standardized testing also creates pressure that can harm student well-being. The American Psychological Association reports that teens frequently cite school as a major source of stress, often tied to academic expectations. Meanwhile, essential “soft skills” such as communication, adaptability, and emotional intelligence receive less attention. A 2024 LinkedIn Learning Workplace Report found that 91% of employers consider soft skills as important as or more important than technical skills, yet 57% believe schools do not adequately prepare students in these areas.

This gap shows that schools are training students to perform well academically, but not necessarily to thrive in careers or adult life.

The lack of life-skills education especially affects students without strong support systems at home. Not all students have parents or guardians who can teach financial literacy or practical decision-making. Research from the Brookings Institution indicates that school-based life-skills programs significantly benefit lower-income students and help reduce long-term inequality. When schools fail to provide these tools, they risk widening existing gaps.

High schools must redefine what success looks like. Instead of focusing solely on GPAs and college acceptance rates, schools should require courses in financial literacy, mental health, communication, and life management. Preparing students for adulthood does not lower academic standards, it strengthens them. If education is meant to prepare students for the future, that future should include knowing how to live responsibly and independently, not just how to apply to college.

ESPORTS IS NOT A REAL SPORT

Opinion

Gisele Estrada

Why is playing video games considered a sport? This topic has many different opinions. People say that esports is a sport because it requires many skills to compete, but many disagree, arguing that there is no physical exertion, so why should it be considered a sport? I personally agree that eSports should not be considered a sport. Yes, it can be considered competitive, but labeling eSports is degrading the hard work real athletes put into sports.

Yes, I do agree that playing video games does require some skill, but it's obviously not much if a 6-year-old can play a video game the same way as a competitive eSports college team member can. But to call it a sport, it needs to fit under the definition of sport: “an activity involving physical exertion and skill in which an individual or team competes against another or others for entertainment.” Since Esports doesn’t fall under this definition, I can easily say that it lacks a main factor of a sport, which is physical exertion. According to the Northern American Society For Sport Management (NASSM), they state, “Specifically, the two major characteristics of sport that are arguably absent in eSports are the physical use of one's body and institutionalization of the sport.”

People can say that eSports does have physical exertion because it uses a lot of brain power, and you're also using your hands to play the game, but you also use your hands and brain to do things daily. Normal things like breathing or writing, yet you don't see people calling breathing a sport, and you most definitely don't see people calling authors competitive athletes because they write books as a job that is in a competitive industry. Which honestly makes it seem like they are calling playing video games a competitive sport that doesn't need physical talent. According to SENET, it states, “One of the primary arguments against classifying esports as a sport is the absence of significant physical exertion. Traditional sports like football, basketball, and soccer require intense physical activity, which contributes to cardiovascular health and overall fitness. Critics argue that since esports involves limited physical movement, it doesn’t meet the physical criteria of a sport.”

Many people can agree to disagree on this opinion, but in my opinion, I feel like it doesn't take much talent to get a victory royale on Fortnite or to make a goal on Rocket League. But I would say it takes a lot of talent to make a homerun in baseball and softball, or even run a 400 in track. Which many people don't realize that this very problem is happening within DaVinci Schools; they fund programs like eSports more than they would track, baseball, and softball, which explains why these teams have to go to other schools and fields to practice, while eSports gets to go across the country to play video games in tournaments. So why do we keep letting them fund these types of programs while other real sports can benefit so much more?

WHY IS ESPORTS CONSIDERS A SPORT?

LACKS PHYSICAL EXERTION

- Calls playing video games a sport
- Could do this from anywhere

DOESNT NEED PHYSICAL SKILLS

- Doesn't benefit the human body
- Doesn't require much training.

COMPETITIVE BUT NOT A SPORT

- eSports is not a sport it playing video games
- Could be competitive in tournaments

FUNDING OTHER REAL SPORTS

- Stop funding trips all over the country
- Make sure reals ones have proper fields

Athletes are paid too much compared to essential workers who actually help society function

Victoria Morales

On Friday nights, stadiums are packed, and jerseys are sold out. Professional athletes are being praised, while the people who teach our classes, care for the sick, and protect our communities go home exhausted, underpaid, and overlooked. As someone who played soccer for ten years and loves sports, I respect the dedication and drive that athletes put into their careers. I strongly believe athletes are paid far too much compared to essential workers who actually keep society functioning. This issue matters because it reveals what society truly values most, and it may not be the thing that actually matters.

First, essential workers are paid far more than non-essential workers, even though they have a greater impact on everyday life. Teachers, nurses, and first responders work long hours to educate students, save lives, and protect communities, yet their pay often does not reflect the importance of their roles. According to Mike Sunnuck's Belgrade News, professional athletes earn an average of $328,830 per year while the average U.S. worker earns only $59.384 annually, meaning athletes make about 453% more than the average American worker. Additionally, athletes earn over 3,200% more than the average global personal income, which is about $9,733 per year, placing professional athletes as the highest paid professions in the United States, even though essential workers provide far more critical services to society.

Secondly, essential workers provide long-term benefits to society while athletes mainly provide entertainment. The pay they receive is based on how popular the sports are and not how important they are to our society and our long-term needs. According to “Scholastic Scope,” athletes are rewarded solely for entertainment value, as it says, “When it comes to athletes’ salaries, it’s important to understand where the money comes from. Top professional sports organizations in the U.S., including the NBA, the NFL, and MLB, all make billions of dollars a year. This money comes mostly from TV and streaming deals, as well as from ticket sales and merchandise like team hats and jerseys.” This quote shows that athletes are paid so much because they help generate huge entertainment, not because their work is essential for society. Finally, the level of public attention given to athletes is far greater than the attention given to essential workers, even though public opinion shows essential workers are deeply respected. Research from the Pew Research Center shows that Americans place very high confidence in medical professionals and educators, especially during times of national crisis. Pew data from the COVID-19 era found that confidence in health professionals rose as people depended on them for accurate information and safety.

mixamcom - Assets Server on 2026-02-26, 21:04 order: 1939647 [8.50" X 11.00"]

This demonstrates that essential workers earn trust through responsibility and expertise rather than fame. However, this respect does not translate into higher pay or visibility. Athletes continue to receive massive salaries driven byhb popularity. This imbalance highlights how recognition and financial reward are not based on contribution to public well-being but on public attention. In conclusion, the huge pay gap between professional athletes and essential workers shows that society often values entertainment over real contributions. Athletes may bring excitement to stadiums and screens, but teachers, nurses, and first responders are the ones who actually keep our communities educated and safe. When essential workers are trusted and rely on them every day, yet still underpaid. It sends a clear message about how society chooses to reward. Recognizing their true value doesn't take anything away from athletes. It just means we start paying attention to the people who truly make society work. Until we do, the people we depend on the most will continue to be overlooked.

HIGH SCHOOLS PREPARE US FOR COLLEGE, BUT NOT FOR LIFE , AND IT'S A PROBLEM

Opinion

Arshad Muhammad

High schools often focus heavily on college preparation, but far less on the real-life skills students need after graduation. This raises an important question: Do high schools focus too much on college preparation and not enough on real-life skills? Many students leave high school knowing how to write essays and take tests, but not how to manage money, understand credit, or handle basic responsibilities. If schools want to support all students, not just the ones going to four-year universities, they need to rethink what it means to be prepared for the future.

One reason high schools fall short is that they prioritize college readiness while ignoring essential life skills. A national survey found that 72 percent of high school graduates felt only moderately, slightly, or not at all prepared for life after graduation. Students also say they want more practical learning, with 49 percent asking for more real-world skills and 40 percent wanting financial literacy or life skills classes. Teachers see the same problem. Only 10 percent believe students entering the workforce are very prepared, and only 21 percent think college-bound students are ready for what comes next. When both students and teachers agree that graduates lack basic preparation, it shows the system is not meeting their needs.

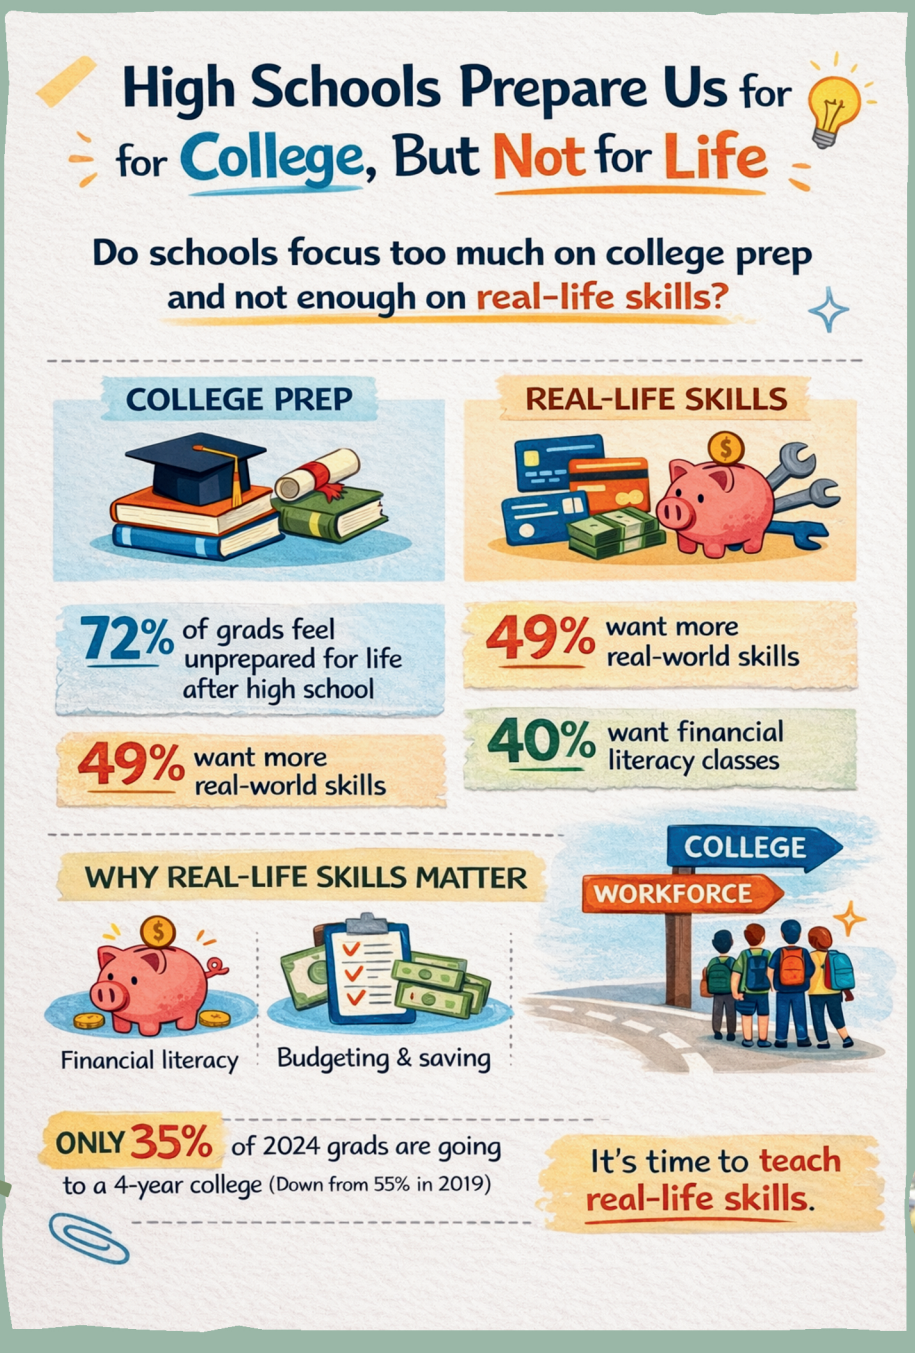

Another reason this issue matters is that many students are not going straight to college. College attendance has been dropping, with only about 35 percent of 2024 graduates enrolling in a four-year college, compared to 55 percent in 2019. More students are entering the workforce or taking different paths, but they often feel unprepared. Surveys show that three-quarters of graduates feel only moderately or less prepared to make college or career decisions. Schools push students toward college, but they do not prepare them for the reality that many will choose other routes.

mixamcom - Assets Server on 2026-02-26, 21:04 order: 1939647 [8.50" X 11.00"]

A third reason high schools need to change is that real-life skills affect long-term stability more than test scores. Financial literacy, for example, is directly connected to economic security, yet only some states require personal finance classes. Research shows that young adults who learn financial skills are more likely to budget, save money, and avoid debt. Students who do not learn these skills face more challenges and long-term consequences. High schools say they prepare students for the real world, but without teaching the basics of adulthood, that promise is incomplete. High schools were meant to prepare students for life, not just for college applications. If we want graduates who are confident and ready for independence, schools need to include real-life skills in their curriculum. Students deserve an education that prepares them for adulthood, not just academics. It is time for schools to rethink their priorities and teach the skills that truly matter.

IS THE ADMINISTRATION OF ICE CONSTITUTIONAL OR MORAL?

Opinion

Brian Winbush

"Fing b*tch," can be heard muttered from the ICE agent's perspective while a lawful US citizen lay dead in her car following their altercation. The U.S. Customs and Immigration Enforcement (ICE) was created in 2003 in response to 9/11. Since then, presidents have used the federal law enforcement agency to carry out sweeps to deport people without citizenship or visas. However, with the Trump administration taking over the White House in 2025, the duties and power of ICE have exponentially increased. ICE has been deployed to numerous urban cities nationally with heavy immigrant populations, disrupting day-to-day life in these prominent places such as Los Angeles, Chicago, Minneapolis, and New York. With the signing of the Big Beautiful Bill on July 4th, 2025, ICE would receive more than $80 billion in funding, used to target 2,450% more immigrants with no criminal record using 91% more detention facilities than in the Biden Administration (Reichlin-Melnick 2026). With ICE disrupting communities nationally and making both immigrants and citizens fear interaction with them, a prominent question arises. Is the administration of ICE constitutional? Is it moral?

The multiple breaches of the Constitution are a very prominent reason why the administration of ICE is unconstitutional. ICE routinely arrests and detains people with administrative warrants, which stem from the orders of the Trump administration. However, without a judicial warrant signed by a neutral judge, ICE can't enter homes or private properties with their administrative warrants, per the Fourth Amendment. Additionally, ICE agents aren't held to the same standard as police officers. On January 7th of this year, Renee Good was murdered in her car by an ICE agent claiming to have fired in "self-defense." Kristi Noem, head of the Department of Homeland Security, also claims Renee was "weaponizing her vehicle." When we let masked men with weapons use them to murder American citizens, that's when democracy is threatened. When individuals are prosecuted by ICE, they are placed in detention facilities without bond hearings or are prosecuted based on faulty evidence, such as the color of their skin!

Sheet: 36

mixamcom - Assets Server on 2026-02-26, 21:04 order: 1939647 [8.50" X 11.00"]

On January 20th of this year, an ICE agent detained a five-year-old Minnesota boy as he returned home. An article in The Guardian states, “An agent had taken Liam out of the car, led the boy to his front door and directed him to knock on the door asking to be let in, ‘in order to see if anyone else was home – essentially using a five-year-old as bait’…” (Levin 2026). This is currently an ongoing investigation, but using a five-year-old as bait upon the doorstep of a private property is not allowed under an administrative warrant. That’s forcing people outside of their homes in order to detain them. In addition to this being unconstitutional, where are their morals?

As mentioned, ICE is detaining preschoolers in order to force immigrants into their custody, which is breaking families apart against their will. The Trump administration has claimed to deploy ICE in major cities in order to get crime and the “bad guys” off the street. However, the data shows that ICE does not care who they’re detaining. According to, As ICE Arrests Increased, a Higher Portion Had No U.S. Criminal Record, “In Trump’s first three months in office, 21.9% of those arrested had no criminal record. The percentage rose to 34.2% in Trump’s second three months, and then to 40.5% in the three months ending in mid-October.

In January, nearly 43% of those detained had no convictions or charges, according to publicly available ICE data.” (Farley 2026). This means that ICE is taking members of families, workers, and community leaders off the streets, causing major disruptions and terror to families. Xochitl Hinojosa, CNN political commentator and former DOJ official, said in an interview, “No. You know what? If you were an immigrant in this country, here legally or not, or even if you are Latino right now, you were terrified of ICE. If ICE were to come to my neighborhood right now, I would be terrified right now. And that is just the reality. So, that is exactly what is happening because ICE is terrorizing families.”

mixamcom - Assets Server on 2026-02-26, 21:04 order: 1939647 [8.50" X 11.00"]

With all being said, it is quite clear how ICE is both unconstitutional and immoral. However, there is hope. America has long had its issues. Not too long ago, it was acceptable for law enforcement to drag people out of their homes based on the color of their skin. What happened? People took to the streets, took to the polls, and made their voices heard. In an era where racism and oppression are beginning to infiltrate our nation again, it is time to do the exact same thing. Numerous cities have taken to the streets to call for ICE out of their communities, to call for the National Guard to defend against genuine threats, and to call for the government to let our peaceful brothers and sisters simply be. So continue to attend protests downtown, vote in local, state, and national elections, and make it clear that the current actions of ICE will not be tolerated. As Bad Bunny once said, “We're not savage, we're not animals, we're not aliens. We are humans, and we are Americans.”

WHEN EXCITEMENT FADES

Haydee Otoya

Cheating is usually painted as the ultimate betrayal due to toxic arguments and a lack of affection. In today's culture, things are different, especially among young teens and adults; infidelity is often rooted from situations that aren't as dramatic and hard for them to admit, boredom. Do people commit infidelity due to boredom in today's relationships? As a current student in high school, infidelity is a very common topic, being the cause of many failed relationships. Boredom can be tied to emotional immaturity, struggling to stay committed because of the effort and vulnerability it takes to be in a relationship. Cheating offers instant gratification without the responsibilities that come with communication and patience. If students want healthier relationships, they need to stop excusing cheating and start addressing boredom honestly before it turns into infidelity.

One major reason boredom leads to cheating is emotional disconnection. The feeling of a relationship becoming a routine drives partners away from each other, causing dissatisfaction. According to psychologist Dr. LePera (2011), boredom disrupts motivation and can reduce pleasure, which can bring up depressive symptoms. These emotions can often cause people to seek external validation from their relationships. Additionally, a study published in the Journal of Sex Research found that individuals who reported feeling bored in their relationships were more likely to engage in infidelity, especially when they felt emotionally unfulfilled.

Couples, specifically Gen Z, have seen how poor communication with easy solutions have became a norm. Instead of taking the time to talk about their dissatisfactions and set boundaries, they go find someone else who can make them happy for the moment that they feel frustrated, as they choose avoidance over problem-solving. One thing most people fail to recognize is that not all relationships are meant to be exciting all the time, a healthy relationship requires honesty and effort. Instead of normalizing infidelity, it should be recognized more for the issue that it is. The saying "all people cheat at least once" is wrong; people need to learn to sit with discomfort and understand boredom is a signal to increase the effort, self-reflect, and have conversations if they actually love a person. Couples, especially Gen Z, have grown used to avoiding uncomfortable conversations and choosing quick solutions instead. Once boredom sets in, some people don't just feel uninterested but they feel unseen as well. The lack of excitement and validation pushes them to look for attention elsewhere because it will make them feel wanted again, even if it's temporary. Instead of communicating their dissatisfaction or working to rebuild the relationship, they turn to cheating. However, not all relationships are meant to feel exciting all the time. A healthy relationship requires honesty, patience, and willingness to sit with discomfort. Normalizing infidelity only ignores the real issue. As a whole the idea that "everyone cheats at least once" should be eliminated, boredom should be a sign for others to self reflect, I'm crease efforts, and be open to honest conversations.

When Excitement Fades

1. Boredom in relationships

Boredom in relationships leads to emotional disconnection and unfulfillment. As excitement fades and the relationship becomes a routine, individuals seek validation and attention outside the relationship. Cheating offers instant gratification without the responsibilty and effort it takes to fix or make changes in a relationship.

2. Emotional Disconnection

Emotional disconnection happens when partners begin to feel distant, unheard, or unfulfilled in their relationship. As routines replace excitement and communication decreases, individuals may feel unseen or undervalued. This lack of emotional closeness can lower satisfaction and motivation within the relationship, leading some people to seek validation elsewhere. Instead of adressing the growing distance through honest conversation.

3. Seeking validation elsewhere

Seeking validation elsewhere happens when someone feels unnoticed, unappreciated, or emotionally unfulfilled in their relationship. Instead of communicating those feelings to their partner, they look for attention, compliments or reassurance from someone new.

4. Normalizing Cheating

Normalizing cheating happens when people treat infidelity as something common or regular. People make cheating to be something everyone does at least once, minimizing the severity and harm it causes. When cheating is excused as boredom or temptaion it prevents individuals from adressing deeper issues. Viewing cheating as normal lowers relationship standards and stops others from taking accountability.

HUMAN ART EXPRESSION

Oscar Lopez

My photo essay explores how human expression appears through art in different spaces around the world. I focus on the contrast between art displayed inside formal buildings and art created freely on public street walls. By comparing these environments, I want to show how creativity changes depending on where it exists and what that reveals about us as people.

In formal spaces, art is carefully arranged, protected, and presented with intention. The lighting, spacing, and silence encourage viewers to slow down and reflect. In these settings, art often feels timeless and important, as if it represents history, tradition, and cultural value. The work is preserved so it can last for generations, showing humanity's desire to hold onto meaning and memory. There is a sense of respect and distance, and the experience can feel quiet and thoughtful.

On the streets, however, art feels immediate and alive. Murals, drawings, and painted messages appear on walls, sidewalks, and buildings where daily life is happening all around them. Street art is often bold, emotional, and sometimes political. It can respond quickly to current events or personal struggles. Unlike art in protected spaces, it can fade, be painted over, or change completely. This temporary nature reflects how life itself is always shifting. Street art feels closer to everyday people because it exists in shared public spaces.

Through my photographs, I aim to show that neither space is more important than the other. Instead, both forms of expression reveal something essential about humanity. Whether carefully preserved or openly displayed to the world, art shows our need to communicate feelings, ideas, and identity. Across cultures and locations, creativity proves that people everywhere share a deep desire to be understood and remembered.

I enjoy listening to music, and I'm sure I'm not the only one. I'm fairly certain that 90% of people would agree that they listen to music every day. I've been listening to music for as long as I can remember, and now I listen to it for almost four hours a day with something playing in my headphones or speakers. I have several playlists on Spotify that are hours long, each one centered around a different mood or genre. I'm always looking for new artists, and my friends and I are always comparing music tastes and arguing over genres. Music is more than background noise in my life; it's a part of who I am. After listening to music as a part of my daily life for so many years, I began to wonder: how does the music my friends listen to affect them? Does the type of music they listen to influence their emotions, personality, or even outlook on life? For instance, does listening to fast-paced rap or electronic music boost motivation and confidence? Do slower, softer songs make a person more mellow or calm?

I have observed that some songs have the ability to alter my mood drastically in a matter of minutes, and I am interested in knowing the extent of this impact, not only on me but also on the people surrounding me.

EVERY DAY IS 2016

Kassandra Martinez

My photo essay, Everyday Is 2016, explores a nostalgic feeling of a time when life felt carefree and simple. I chose this theme because I want people to remember how good 2016 felt when our lives revolved around music, pool days, Starbucks drinks, Snapchat filters, and staying out until sundown. It felt like a time of freedom, creativity, and living in the moment without overthinking. I was interested in capturing that emotion and how something as simple as a sunset or summer night can hold so much meaning when we look back on it. When choosing the people and places to photograph, I focused on scenes that naturally reflect connection and youth, such as beach sunsets, Santa Monica rides, palm trees, and quiet neighborhoods. I included details like the Starbucks drink and a collage of different types of music that represented social media culture and the era of 2016. Through warm lighting and candid moments, I discovered that 2016 was not just about trends, it was about the feeling of being present and carefree. This project represents more than an aesthetic. It captures a memory of a time that many of us now realize we truly miss.

THE LAST LIGHT

Justin Mikhael

Golden hour is a moment most of us pass by without thinking a quick shift in the sky, a warm glow on the trees, a softening of the world before it fades into night.

For this photo essay, I wanted to slow that moment down and ask a simple but meaningful question, What does golden hour teach us about noticing beauty? Instead of chasing dramatic landscapes or perfect conditions, I focused on the everyday scenes around me: trees catching the last beam of sunlight, sidewalks washed in warm color, reflections of the sunset in puddles and windows. These are places we walk past every day, but golden hour transforms them into something worth paying attention to.

This project matters because DVC students live fast. We rush between classes, deadlines, rehearsals, and responsibilities, rarely stopping to look up. Golden hour challenges that pace. It reminds us that beauty isn't something we have to search for it's already here, waiting in the ordinary spaces we overlook. By photographing these moments, I wanted to show how light can shift our perspective and reveal details we usually miss.

My goal is for readers to walk away with a new habit: noticing. Noticing the way light hits a tree. Noticing the colors in the sky. Noticing the small, quiet moments that make a day feel meaningful. If golden hour teaches us anything, it's that beauty is brief, but it's also everywhere and the more we learn to see it, the more present we become in our own lives.

Every edge of the day blurred into gold, as if the light itself was exhaling.

QUIET MOMENTS IN MOTION

Siyur Pyburn

Shopping means different things to different people. For some, it's all about the excitement of finding a great deal. For others, it's more of a habit, a moment to imagine new versions of themselves. I wanted to explore the emotional side of shopping, not just the items people buy, but also their feelings during those moments of anticipation and decision-making. I talked to four different individuals who have different relationships with shopping, asking them when they last felt genuinely excited to shop, where their favorite places to shop are, and the emotional path they take from spotting something to actually purchasing it. I photographed the places they visit often, like malls, stores, and walkways, because these locations hold their memories and shape their experiences. What I discovered is that shopping is more than just a transaction. It involves personal growth, self-control, nostalgia, and those quiet moments of thought that happen between wanting something and making a decision. Each person revealed something unique about how they've evolved as shoppers, shifting from impulsive buying to being more intentional, from rushing to being more mindful. My photos capture that sense of anticipation, the glow of store windows at dusk, the wet pavement after rain, and the peacefulness right before a purchase. These images focus on who we become when we make choices with care, not just what we buy.

Behind every purchase is an experience shaped by memories relationships and the feeling of belonging.

From nostalgia in old stores to laughter in familiar aisles shopping spaces can hold personal stories.

A simple trip to the store can reconnect people with family friendships and meaningful milestones.

"I think the emotion comes from being in that space, like stores isn't just a place to buy things it's where you talk, laugh, and make memories with people."

"When I went shopping with friends, I felt immediate nostalgia because all the memories of shopping with my friends in eighth grade came back."

Rain-slicked pavement, swaying palms. The quiet that lets you wander without rushing, think without pressure.

I am what I wear

Maya Thornton

Fashion has always been something i've looked up to especially while in highschool, I still remember asking my mom when I was little, "why do people care about fashion so much, can't you just wear whatever and not care?" until I grew up and realized it was one of the things I valued the most. My inspiration has came from other people/celebrities, things that i've watched while growing up and a lot of anime. My style reflects on nostalgia from childhood, some inspiration from the 60's, and the bright aspects of life. Something that I will know once I grow up is that i'll always be the same when it comes to my style, expressive and unique, something that only me could fully understand. People ask me what my "aesthetic" is and I just say it's myself. I wear what I like without having to look for something molds me into a box when in reality i'm much beyond that. I think that you'll truly know what suits you best and what fits your aesthetic once you start wearing things you like isntead of something you are constantly seeking for on social media.

REGRETS FROM 9TH GRADE

Sebastian Camacho

My documentary is about what the seniors regret from 9th grade. They talk about the bad things they did during their time in 9th grade. They mentioned not socializing and getting better grades, also paying attention in class and getting their work done. They also had advice that they would give the freshman, since they already went through the struggles. They showed a lot of empathy for the freshman and encouraged them to not make the same mistakes

Isabel Gomez

Podcast / Document

My podcast is about forgive and forget and why it's such an important part of life and personal growth. In the podcast, we talk about what forgiveness really means, whether people actually believe in forgiving and forgetting, and how it can affect relationships. Each person shares a personal story about a time they chose to forgive and forget, explaining what happened and how it made them feel afterward. We also discuss whether they regretted that decision or felt at peace with it, showing that forgiveness can be powerful but also complicated.

LIFE BEHIND THE SCENES OF DA VINCI SECURITY WORKERS

Kaylah Jauregui Guzman

Documentary

Every school day, students walk through campus without thinking twice about their safety, but that sense of security does not happen by accident. This documentary focuses on the behind-the-scenes work of school security staff and follows what their day looks like from start to finish. The essential question guiding this piece is: 'What does a typical day look like for school security workers, and how do they help keep students safe behind the scenes?' This topic is important because security workers play a major role in maintaining a safe and organized school environment, yet their efforts often go unnoticed. DVC students should be interested because these staff members directly impact our daily routines, safety, and overall school experience. Through this documentary, viewers will gain a deeper appreciation for the responsibility, awareness, and dedication it takes to protect students and keep the school running smoothl
