CLUB HISTORY

'My foot is on my native heath' . . . these words are unashamedly borrowed from Scott. He had never heard of the village nor of its cricket club, but undoubtedly he would have approved of Roehampton and of its lovely ground on Putney Heath.

Roehampton CC has always been intimately linked with the village. Little of its first season in 1842 has been handed down, but it is known that the ground was then situated nearer the village (which was itself about a quarter mile nearer Barnes than now) on a part of the Common bordered by gravel pits.

Roehampton has played on its present Putney Heath ground since 1859, when Earl Spencer, "the Lord of the Manor", suggested that this site might prove better. The villagers were given the task of clearing their own match square and of cutting down trees and bushes.

A lot has changed in the ebb and flow of the intervening 170-odd years – the ground is now professionally prepared for one! It remains, however as picturesque as ever and although modern life seemingly has left people with less time on their hands to enjoy watching cricket on the Heath as those in the photo below, a nice sunny day will still bring out the locals to watch “the Deers” play!

A comprehensive history of Roehampton Cricket Club up to 1951 is available on our website at:
