A really useful set of ideas
- practical approaches that I can put to use immediately...

A brief history...

Many meetings and group sessions can have a demotivational and negative effect on attendees. Whatever your level of experience, it is always worth considering alternative approaches when holding meetings or facilitating team and group sessions.

Key benefits

Identify why so many meetings are unproductive and how to overcome this

Agree the purpose of your meetings and recognise the value of these to you, your team and organisation

Learn the art of facilitation in its truest sense, gaining group participation, collaboration and attention

Shape your meetings so that they are right for your audience and agreed outcomes

Duration and format

One or half-day in-house course that can be tailored to specific needs.

Who is this course for?

Anyone who plans and runs meetings at any level, from formal board meetings to informal discussions, who wants to save time, energy and resources and avoid unnecessary conflict. Those who facilitate meetings and discussions of any size, who would like to develop their skills in order to become more effective.

Facilitation and Meeting Skills

What's it all about?

It can be very hard to keep the attention of your audience. In today's business environment there can be many distractions and attitudes that make group sessions unpredictable. Having the skills to handle diverse and difficult groups is invaluable, so it's always a good idea to have a 'toolkit' of enhanced techniques that can prepare you for any eventuality.

This programme is delivered by experienced facilitators who will share the secrets of their success and their knowledge. They will ensure that the new skills for your 'toolkit' are practical and useable so that you benefit from increased confidence and impact when facilitating and in meetings.

What is facilitation?

Good facilitation in business is more important than we often realise. If you are ever involved in group activity then you'll need a good facilitator to get the most out of everyone. Whether in a meeting, or training groups of people, effective facilitation means:

- Motivating groups of people.
- Enrapturing and engaging your audience.
- Leading the discussion.
- Ensuring everyone works together to produce real results.
- Stopping the process being the main barrier.

Why improve your facilitation and meeting skills?

If you want to get the best out of meetings and create a lasting impression during group interaction, then this is the programme for you to:

- Watch your confidence grow to new levels as you learn the skills to control and manage team activities.
- Effortlessly deal with awkward situations and difficult groups
- Always be prepared for any eventuality and deal with it confidently and with integrity.

Why do we need effective facilitation?

Facilitation can save time, help generate better ideas and bring a group of people together. Here are some underlying principles and a guide to best practice:

- Get the best out of all attendees - just because people are bright it doesn't mean they know how to work well with ideas. A good facilitator can bring everyone together to generate an overall viewpoint.
- Speed up decision making - use intuitive thought and don't labour over one point; quality decisions will be made in the quickest possible time.
- Take people out of their assumed roles - encourage people to stop hiding behind their roles.
- Take away the fear of getting it wrong - give everyone equal respect and create a level playing field to encourage everyone to contribute.
- Reduce conflict - if all ideas are treated equally and fairly the potential for conflict is reduced.
- More enjoyable sessions - avoiding conflict and getting straight to the point enhances people's enjoyment.
- Reach a consensus everyone agrees on - as all attendees have had a chance to air their views, all decisions are mutual and learning is extended.
- A clear commitment to decisions made - everyone will feel involved and have input, making them feel more committed to the outcome.
- Motivation to resolve problems - by looking at a preferred scenario rather than the problem, attendees will feel more motivated.
- Ensure everyone is heard - all views should achieve equal respect.
- Increase confidence - by having the right facilitation tools available.
