THE BIG BANG
 124 Walton Street, Jericho, Oxford
 01865 514441

The six of us are charming, beautiful and modest too!
 But the thought of Feb 14th, leaves us feeling rather blue.

For this year we're all single and will be 'til that day has passed.
 All that effort, all that pressure, the chaps we know just can't be arsed!

And who can really blame them?
 Society dictates they pay for a card, flowers and dinner - no wonder they are scared away!

How are they to know, that we'd gladly pay our share and that we don't want presents, we'd just like to know they care?

It's not something we can tell them without looking too keen.
 And they wouldn't ask us, for fear of seeming mean.

So they won't bother this year. They'll all go to the pub instead.
 Ironic that this day for lovers kills all thoughts of romance dead.

Instead we could go shopping and spend all of our cash, but what we need is comfort food, So please, bring on the mash!!

THEATRE REVIEW: MAKE HIM CURE ME

Burton Taylor Theatre 9.30pm, till 4th February

Make Him Cure Me is an adaptation of Euripides' Hippolytos, but this version is about a very 21st century preoccupation – illness, and specifically, viruses.

Theo, played by Satbir Singh, is a successful doctor, very posh and very arrogant, a proper old-school alpha male. He returns to London from a Mediterranean town, where he has managed to cure the population of a virulent flu-like disease. He is the conquering hero and the darling of the press, but there is a dark secret behind his medical triumph, something to do with Arcelia (Jane Elliott-Kelly) his new squeeze from the infected town.

Theo has also abandoned his second wife, the beautiful but bed-ridden Phoebe (Corinne Sawers), and left her in the care of his son Horatio (Patrick Netherton). As Theo prepares to leave London again, Horatio and his step-mother start to grow closer...

Make Him Cure Me has the chilly, vicious feel of classical drama. You wouldn't want to go for a drink with any of the characters, but they are engaging, and I was held by the compellingly awful trajectory of the drama. The play has many modern resonances, none of them very wholesome. It made me think of Hwang Woo-Suk, the South Korean doctor who was celebrated for his ground-breaking cloning work, only to be exposed as a fake who had fabricated his research. Even worse, it reminded me of the stories of horrible myths that have grown up in certain countries about what can cure AIDS. The play's take on sexual politics seems oddly dated, but this may be a deliberate comment on the macho world of medicine.

The acting is all very accomplished, but most impressive is Corinne Sawers, whose Phoebe comes on like a consumptive Mrs Robinson. There are also some nice, evocative touches in the direction.

Make Him Cure Me is an impressive, original adaptation by a young writer; a great little nugget of nastiness.
