

Orienteering

15/3/18

Thankfully the forecast of a cold and very wet afternoon didn't materialise, though the children did end up covered in mud. That's what happens in orienteering. A sport that combines running and map reading. The children had to read their map and go to different points on the course where they had to 'dib' the control. This involved using an electronic device that they carried with them. They then returned to their partners who had to go and find a different one. This continued until they had found six different control points, their time was electronically recorded and a print out of their time was given to them. A great event with all of the children really enjoying themselves.
