Historic Dublin

Previously used by the citizens of Dublin to graze livestock, the Dublin city assembly in 1663 decided that the 27-acre plot of land that is now known as St. Stephen's Green would be marked out as a park with the remaining ground to be let out into 90 building lots with each tenant to plant six sycamore trees in the new park. The houses built around the Green were rapidly replaced by new buildings in the Georgian style and then became a particularly fashionable and desired residential location during the 18th century, owing mainly to the opening of Grafton Street in 1708 and Dawson Street in 1723.

One of the most notable residents of St. Stephen's Green was Sir Arthur Guinness who grew up in Iveagh House (No.80 the present-day home of the Irish Department of Foreign Affairs). In 1877 he offered to buy off the park's debts and return the park for public use. His next objective was to further improve the park and provide an oasis of peace and tranquillity in the city centre. After three years of construction work, including gated entrances at each corner and a feature three-acre lake, the park re-opened in 1880, once more and to one and all. Sir Arthur achieved his objectives and today the park is visited and explored every day by thousands of Dubliners and overseas visitors alike.

St Stephens Green remains Ireland's largest and most important Georgian Square and is home to many important Irish institutions including the Royal College of Surgeons, Shelbourne Hotel, Catholic University Church, Office of Public Works and the St. Stephen's Green Club. It is also home to leading global corporates including KPMG, Standard Life, Maples Group, Kennedy Wilson, Aercap, Cantor Fitzgerald, Comgest, Royal London and Julies Baer.

It also remains an important gateway to and natural extension of Grafton Street itself.

Exceptional Dublin

Dublin with a vibrant, young and cosmopolitan population is Ireland's capital city and most important retail destination. Approximately 1.9 million people are living in the greater Dublin area accounting for 40% of the population of the state. This is forecast to grown to 2.2 million by 2031.

Now the only English-speaking Eurozone capital, Dublin has been the driver of Ireland's recent record economic growth and is the preferred European HQ location for the vast majority of the world's leading tech companies.

Dublin city centre is really an eco-system made up of a multitude of differing yet complimentary uses, ensuring a unique and vibrant environment. Grafton Street and its environs serve as the city's epicentre and is home to many of Irelands most important retail, office, cultural, civic, educational and government occupiers and institutions.
