

#BeingBlackMeans

“I love being a black woman because, just as the melanin of my skin resembles chocolate, being born black makes me naturally enchanting. I am very proud of carrying the heritage of the women who swung the cradle of humanity. Being woman and being black feels like a statement on its own, for a very simple reason: in a society where these two factors make me instantly prone to oppression and/or prejudice, there is no other way other than being great, kind and authentic.”
