The art world is still hampered with many a issues regarding representation and equality and the CSM foundation course looks after many people who are within or going into that field. Raising issues and maintaining this strong sense of self within the CSM community shouldn't have to be something we just expect to happen without any help or resources. I want to be part of that help. It's cringey to say but this world is pretty damn big and if we want to help nourish this and push it in the right direction (not politically as such) the identity of an 'upcoming' group of foundation students is an integral part of this process. With added experience as head of student council's in previous schools and a position on an exciting Arts Admin youthboard, I am aware of how this can work and want to be part of this thing working.

I am interested in all of this in order for we students to all to be at our creative and psychological best and would be excited to delve into this new opportunity ASAP.
