

Alex Amen is a twenty-five-year-old artist and songwriter from Texas. At eighteen, Alex moved from Texas to California to study filmmaking. After one semester he dropped out and moved onto the "Dittman Family Commune", a historic commune with ties to the anti-war, civil rights, and psychedelic countercultural movements of the mid-60's. It was here that he formed his first band, "American Slang" in 2017. The band broke up shortly after, resulting in Alex's move from Southern California to an island in the Puget Sound of Washington State. Here he spent three years in relative isolation, taking up various interests in mycology, mountaineering, poetry, and wooden boat building. As years passed, Alex felt the increasing need to return to California to pursue music. In January of 2023 he self produced his first record (unreleased) in a self built studio at the historic Zorthian Ranch in Altadena, California. Alex now lives in Los Angeles and is performing and releasing music among the growing folk, Americana and country scene in the city.
