Research

Original research

Original research on medical, biomedical, or medical humanities topic can be submitted. Such papers follow the standard format of Introduction, Method, Results, Discussion. Supplementary data set publication is encouraged.

Case studies

The journal publishes medical case studies, typically of a patient, but also of significant events, decisions, projects, or policies.

Focused

These reviews focus on a specific topic in detail, summarising and synthesising published works. Sections of these may be integrated in relevant, specialist Wikipedia articles.

Encyclopaedic

These broad summaries cover an entire topic and are written in an encyclopaedic tone. They are commonly uploaded to Wikipedia after publication. They can also be re-writes, expansions or improvements of existing important Wikipedia articles.

Image

These are short reviews centred around a key figure. This can be medical photography, imaging, a diagram, schematic, video or animation. The article gives relevant background, explains the image and acts as an extended figure legend.

Review

Ideal for medical and research professionals aiming to:

Achieve maximum outreach, exposure, and impact

Be rewarded for expert input to open access projects

Contribute to the world's most read encyclopaedia

Gain experience as corresponding (last) author
