

This week St Matthews has celebrated

INDUSTRY WEEK

It is important for students to have aspirations for their future lives. We wanted to show children the importance of their education and the impact it will have on their future roles in the workplace.

At St Matthew's we actively seek out opportunities for pupils to meet people who will inspire them to reach for their goals and work hard educationally to achieve a full and successful life in the future. So throughout Industry week parents, grandparents and friends volunteered to come in to school in order to raise pupil's aspirations and motivate them want to achieve their full potential.

The children prepared a question-and- answer session to find out more about their visitors and their jobs and lots of interesting and 'fun' dialogue took place. Pupils spent the week exploring ideas about their futures and meeting people from a wide range of career and industry backgrounds, such as agriculture, fashion, hair and make-up, solicitor, accountant, doctor, paramedic, chef and a leading social inclusion practitioner.

Below are some of the superb role models that have helped them think creatively about their futures. Thank you all so much!
