In the book, The Building Boy really misses Grandma. At the moment we all know what it is like to miss family and friends. Julia Donaldson explores these feelings in her book The Paper Dolls. Click on the link below to listen to The Paper Dolls written and read by Julia Donaldson.

PSHE

Think about our previous learning about similarities and differences and stereotypes. Are stereotypes fair? Why/why not? It doesn't matter if a boy wants to play with a doll or a girl wants to play with a car. Remind the child that they can have similarities and differences with their peers and still be friends. We don't have to be the same or enjoy the same things to be friends. Think about one of your closest friends and complete the questions on the worksheet:

- How is your friend different to you?
- How is your friend similar to you?
- How does it feel to be friends with this person?
- How would you stand up for your friend if someone was bullying them?
