Dear parents of our Pokémon obsessed children,

It is great to see so many of our children developing a love for collecting Pokémon cards. Unfortunately, some of the children have become a little upset when they have gone home with fewer cards than they came to school with due to trading or battling. At Sandbrook we have categorised the types of Pokémon card players into three groups in order to help the children decide how they best want to use their card. These groups are as follows:

A Collector – this type of player collects Pokémon cards and does not wish to keep them all.

A Trader – this type of player wishes to trade (swap) their cards with other players and understands that a trade is forever.

A Battler – this type of player is willing to 'battle' with other children and understands that at the end of a battle they may have to give their card(s) to another child, permanently.

We would therefore appreciate it if you could go over the above types of players with your children and help them to decide which type they want to be. In addition to this, we will now be running a Pokémon club at 12:30pm on the following days to ensure that 'traders' and 'battlers' can have a little bit of help if they need it.
