

What does Naace provide?

- a weekly e-newsletter providing up-to-date information about ICT in education;
- academic journals providing a range of illustrated, referenced articles written by researchers and classroom practitioners covering practical and strategic issues for ICT in education across all sectors;
- priority ticket for BETT (London) including access to the Local Authority lounge;
- representation with Government and national bodies.

What can Members do?

- participate in focussed consultations and think tanks addressing current challenges to embedding ICT in education;
- contribute to preparing responses to government on strategic issues relating to ICT in education;
- receive priority information about government initiatives affecting the use of ICT in education;
- access online activities and resources;
- participate in working groups which influence regional and national strategic decision-making related to ICT in education;
- gain support in working towards the prestigious ICT mark accreditation scheme which Naace delivers on behalf of Becta;
- gain support in undertaking the Becta self-review framework (SRF);
- share success, receive answers to questions and debate issues relating to ICT in education through online discussion forums and email lists;
- apply for annual research grants and bursaries;
- undertake the ICT co-ordinators course with accreditation from Nottingham Trent University;
- attend regional and national conferences on a wide range of practical and strategic topics throughout the year;
- make savings of up to 85% on Microsoft software through the Naace Microsoft SELECT scheme.

Who is Naace?

www.naace.org
office@naace.org

Who is Naace?

Naace is the professional association for those concerned with advancing education through the appropriate use of information and communications technology (ICT).

Members and Sponsoring Partners of Naace work in the public and private sectors. They come from many diverse backgrounds including teachers, school managers, curriculum leaders, lecturers, local authority advisors, independent consultants, software developers and designers, sales personnel, technicians, student teachers, company managers, national partners and colleagues from commerce and industry.

A dedicated team of permanent staff is based in Nottingham to support the Association's activities.

Members, Sponsoring Partners and staff all share a passion for embedding the effective use of ICT into teaching, learning and school management. If you recognise that passion, and are looking for like-minded professionals – join Naace to share it with us!

What does Naace do?

- provides practical information, resources, support and guidance to members, sponsoring partners and UK government departments on current issues relating to ICT in education;
- supports networking opportunities for members from schools, Local Authorities, the IT industry and UK government agencies;
- engages in consultation at local, regional, national and international levels;
- provides professional development opportunities.

Why should I join Naace?

Naace aims to promote the appropriate use of ICT, not just as a specialist subject, but across all curriculum areas and to assist with whole school improvement. By joining Naace you demonstrate your commitment to this aim and become part of a strong body of ICT professionals.

You also join a passionate community of interest that provides peer to peer support, enables strong networking opportunities and which acts as a catalyst to improve educational benefits for all learners.

Naace is very well respected by industry partners, local and regional authorities, non-departmental public bodies and the UK government.

By increasing Naace membership and creating an even stronger community of practitioners across all sectors of education, we will increase our ability to influence UK government policy for the benefit of all.

Benefits of Naace membership

Naace membership is available to individuals or institutions.

Benefits depend on your type of membership, but includes publications, resources, professional development and opportunities to share experiences with like-minded professionals.

For more information see www.naace.co.uk/join or email membership@naace.org