Support Information

The toxicity evaluation of one-dimensional nanoparticles using Caenorhabditis elegans: A comparative study of halloysite nanotubes and chitin nanocrystals

Xiujuan Zhao¹ †, Qinli Wan² †, Xiaodie Fu², Xiao Meng², Xianfeng Ou¹, Ruwei Zhong³, Qinghua Zhou² ‡, Mingxian Liu¹ ‡.

¹Department of Materials Science and Engineering, Jinan University, 601 Huangpu Avenue West, Tianhe District, Guangzhou 510632, China
²Biomedical Translational Research Institute, Jinan University, 601 Huangpu Avenue West, Tianhe District, Guangzhou 510632, China
³Internship Program, Biomedical Translational Research Institute, Jinan University, 601 Huangpu Avenue West, Tianhe District, Guangzhou 510632, China

*E-mail: gene@email.jnu.edu.cn;
*E-mail: liumx@jnu.edu.cn.
† Xiujuan Zhao and Qinli Wan contributed equally to this work.

Number of pages: 4
Number of Figures: 4
Figure S1 The appearance of HNTs and ChNCs suspension after standing 3 days (2 wt. %)

Figure S2 CLSM images of mBMSCs co-cultured with rhodamine-labelled HNTs and ChNCs
Figure S3 Effects of HNTs and ChNCs on lipid metabolism of C. elegans. (a) The image of ORO staining. (b, c) Quantification of ORO staining. Mean ± SD.; n ≥ 30 per condition; P value was calculated using Student’s t test; no significance is abbreviated as ns.
Figure S4 Dye-leakage assay of wild type animals treated with HNTs and ChNCs.