Q: I am trying to access this article in the journal Asian Affairs -

I need a PDF of the article if possible, but so far I have not been able to access it either to read or to download.

A: HKUL does not subscribe to all online issues. Some old issues are available in print version only and you will not be able to discover the full text of these old issues at FIND@HKUL.

You should perform a journal title search and check the availability of bound journals.

2016 JAN 1 (VerticalNews) -- By a News Reporter.Staff News Editor at Energy Weekly News -- Investigators discuss new findings in Energy Research. According to news reporting originating from Hong Kong, People’s Republic of China, by VerticalNews correspondents, research stated, “This paper presents a combined daylight, airflow network and building energy simulation of a Public Rental Housing (PRH) development in Hong Kong to fulfill the requirement of the local green building guidance. The numerical modelling results are partly validated by on-site measurements during the period with the highest monthly average outdoor temperature.”

Our news editors obtained a quote from the research from Hong Kong Polytechnic University, “Different ventilation control strategies are simulated to optimize natural ventilation performance. The simulation results show that the full-day ventilation strategy contributes to a lower average and peak indoor temperatures compared to the non-ventilation and night-ventilation scenarios. The indoor operative temperature of a worst-case vacant flat lies under the upper 80% acceptability limits in ASHRAE 55 during 67.5% of the modelled period in July. On the other side, at least 95.5% of the habitable area in the case buildings is predicted to experience a higher average daylight factor of 1% compared with the local green building guidance.”

According to the news editors, the research concluded, “Furthermore, the energy saving potential of the combined natural ventilation and daylight strategies is anticipated to be 51.9% for air-conditioning and 8.3% for lighting compared to a baseline building respectively.”
Q: Can I search for everything that are available in the databases subscribed by the library?

A: FIND@HKUL is a tool for discovering indexed information, it does not guarantee access to all full text articles retrieved.

In fact, full text accessibility depends on a number of contributing factors such as subscription coverage, source of the article, and occasional changes to the subscription platform and configuration on the vendor’s side.

In many cases, the external changes are beyond the Libraries’ knowledge and control.
