People do more than get hungry, they get hungry for their favorite restaurant food. What type of restaurants do people prefer for their favorite food? Restaurants can be divided into fast food, sit down, and fancy.

Fast food restaurants like McDonald's are good for "on the go" food. McDonald's charges about six dollars for a combo meal that consists of a hamburger, French fries, and a drink. Similarly, the food variety is slim with options being mostly variations on hamburgers and the size of the fries. Likewise, the atmosphere at McDonald's is very cafeteria-like with bright colors and lights. Furthermore, there is no waitress, so people have to take the food to a table on a tray and then throw out the garbage before they leave.

When there is a little more time to spare, a good choice for eating out is a sit down restaurant like Applebee's. The cost for food at Applebee's ranges from ten to twenty dollars for a meal. In addition, the food selection is extensive, offering tasty meals like steak, pasta, chicken, and fancy salads. Moreover, the atmosphere at Applebee's is more relaxing. People can look at pictures on the wall or watch televisions to keep themselves entertained while waiting for their food. With the decoration and televisions, they have many topics for conversation. Also, a waitress serves the customers.

For special eating out occasions, there are fancier restaurants like Lascas. A meal starts at the price of twenty dollars at this luxury restaurant. Specifically, the food choices at Lascas are more sophisticated with lobster and fillet minion. Next, the ambiance at Lascas is more intimate with low lighting, quiet surroundings, and neutral colors. The customers focus on their dining companion rather than the restaurant. In addition, the restaurant uses linen tablecloths and cloth napkins. Fancy restaurants usually have a waitress, a water/coffer server, and even a wine server to make the eating experience more enjoyable.

A person can select a fast food, a sit down or a fancy restaurant based on price, food and atmosphere to fit their dining desire. No matter which restaurant, there are no pots and pans to clean!
