

Pre-Doctorate: how to apply

Your path to a doctoral degree

› kaplanpathways.com/pre-doc

Applying for a doctoral degree can be complex, and often requires more information and time than applications for other levels of study. The Pre-Doctorate course includes step-by-step advice on how to make this application, so don't worry! In this guide, we will explain how to complete the application form for the Pre-Doctorate, and give you useful tips on how to present yourself as a strong candidate.

Research area and institution

It's very important to decide on your specific research area before you apply. You should also think about how your chosen research area matches up with our Pre-Doctorate partner universities, so it's worth researching their specific departments. This can help you decide if they are the most suitable university for you.

Consider the following:

- Will this research area sustain your interest over several years?
- Is it in an area in which there are currently gaps in knowledge or on-going debates?
- Does your research area have a strong reputation at one of our Pre-Doctorate partner universities?
- Are there details of institution and department research activities relevant to this area on the university websites?

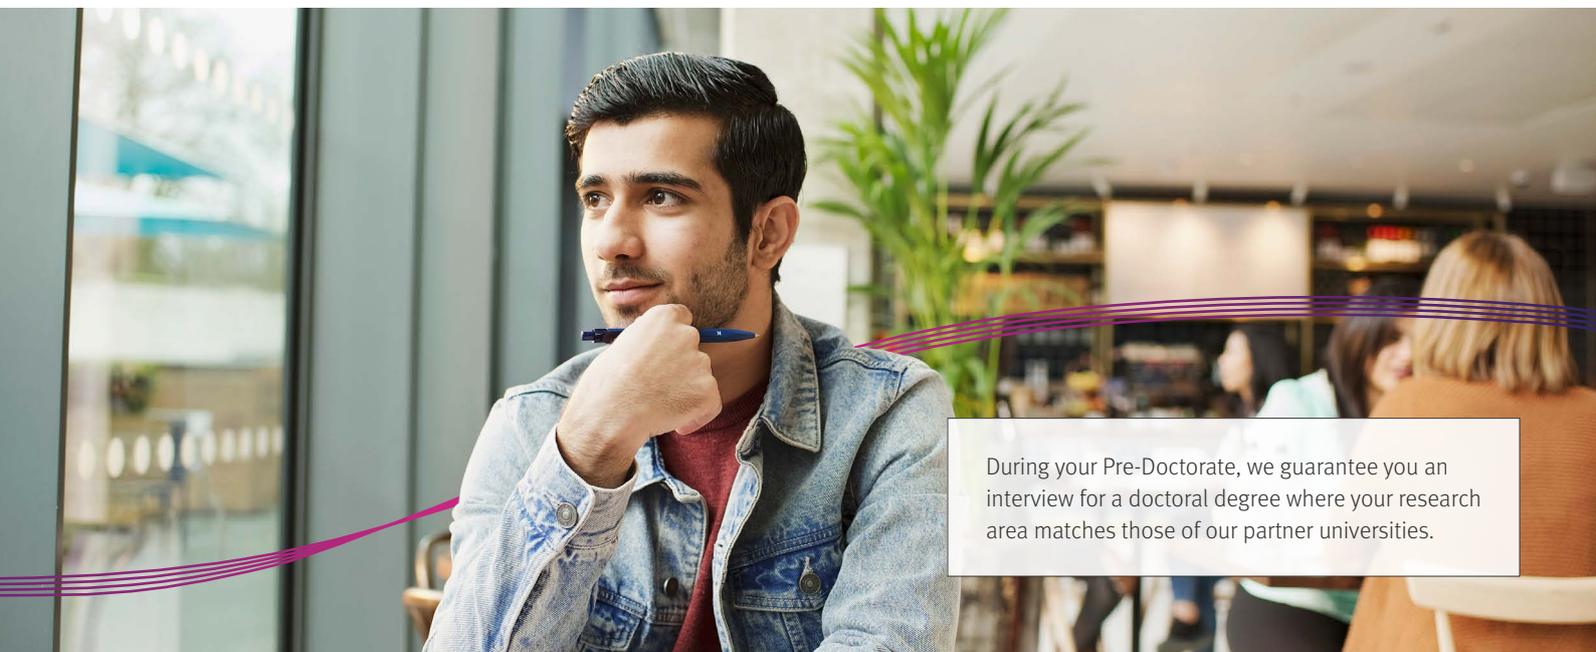

Research area and background

As part of your application, you will need to submit a 500-to-1,000-word description of your proposed research area. This doesn't need to be a detailed piece of work, as we are looking just for your insight and understanding of your specific study interest.

Here are a few suggestions on what to include in this section:

- Why are you pursuing your research area?
- Are there certain aspects of this area that are important or of interest to you?
- Why do you wish to study at the university or universities you have chosen?
- If you are proposing a specific research project, how would this contribute to the general area of study?
- What previous experience do you have in your proposed research area?
- What else would make you a suitable candidate for a doctoral degree and the Pre-Doctorate?

We also ask that you attach any previous research proposals you may have from earlier doctoral degree applications. This will help us clearly identify the type of support you will need during your Pre-Doctorate.

During your Pre-Doctorate, we guarantee you an interview for a doctoral degree where your research area matches those of our partner universities.

Pre-Doctorate: application process
