

Old Churches of Kiltarn

Kiltarn Church, turn of the century 1890s-1900s

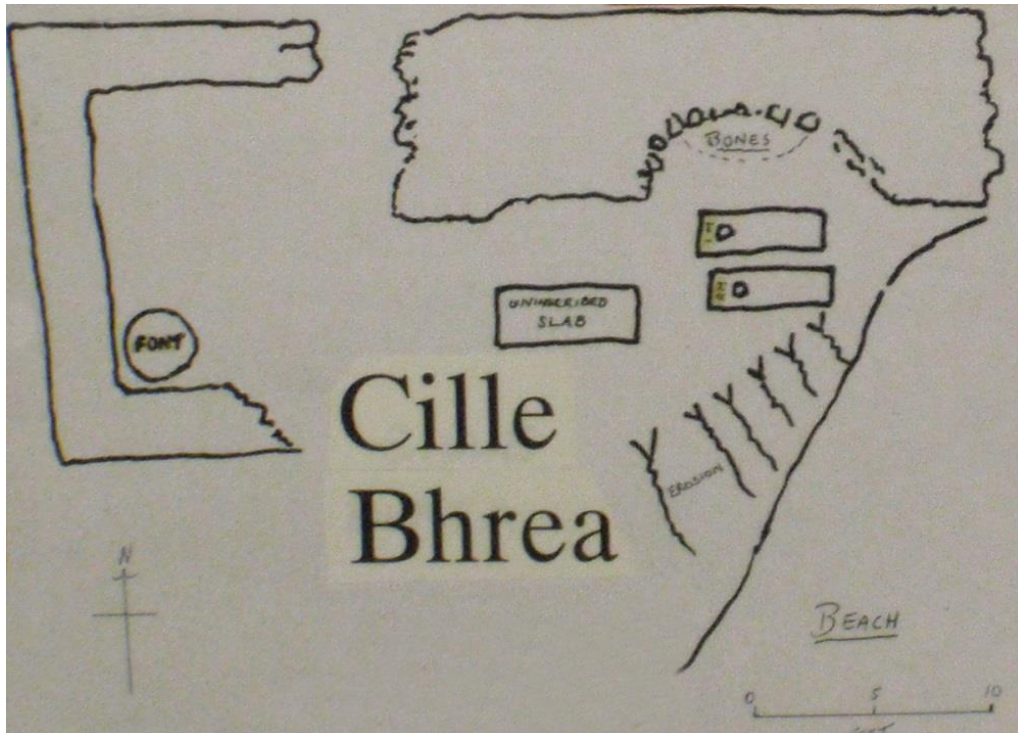

(courtesy Alistair Munro)

Old Kiltearn Manse

Demolished end 19th century

(courtesy J R MacDonald)

Plan of Cille Bhrea by Dr. Tony Woodham

(NB The font is in Dingwall Museum)

Munro graves at Cille Bhrea (since disappeared)

Probably those of Robert and John, grandsons of Andrew Munro, Lemlair. John resided in Invergordon, Robert was probably the Robert of Killechoan, up before the Kiltearn Session in 1724 for fornication. Robert's grave is marked 1744.

(Notes and photograph by Dr Tony Woodham)

NB Munro eagle head at right

Chapel clock to chime again

FUTURE residents of a soon-to-be-converted Evanton chapel will have a timely reminder of the original building — a working clock tower.

For the restored tower — complete with new clock — is part of a £110,000 project to convert the former Evanton Free Church Chapel into two three-bedroom homes.

Work on the historic landmark is now under way and it is due to be ready for occupation within six months.

The chapel was said to be in a bad state of repair following years of disuse when Ross and Cromarty District Council launched a rescue operation with grant aid from the Historic Buildings Council.

When the houses are completed they will be let to local authority tenants.

UNITED SECESSION CHURCH predated the Free Church

The Old Chapel of the United Secession Church

It became the Sunday school for the Free Church,
and then a school for girls
before becoming a home, falling into disrepair, nearly becoming a local history museum and then being developed as 2 houses

The original Kiltearn Free Church, Drummond Road

(now 2 houses)

Photographs provided to Evanton Oral History Project for display

Kindly re-photographed and retyped by Willie Fraser, Evanton

Edited for web by AC 04.05.21

