Make a difference to the sport you love

Cycle racing in the North can only take place with trained race officials volunteering to help to run the events. Being a race commissaire is an exhilarating position to be in; controlling a race convoy, ensuring the safety of riders, making sure that races are fair and working with race organisers to make a good event great is a satisfying contribution to the sport. Being in the chiefs car is the best position to soak up the action!

Scottish Cycling train, mentor and support commissaires until they feel comfortable officiating races. More trained commissaires are needed to run road and time trial events in Highlands, Moray and the Islands.

Future race seasons depend on more volunteers coming forward, it's not "some other person", it's you.

If you want to contribute to the cycle race scene (without just racing!), then get in touch with Scottish Cycling @ the details below. We're organising training and need to hear from you.
