Sunday 1 February 2009 – Fourth Sunday of the Year

The Church in Corinth

Our second reading today is from St Paul's first letter to the Corinthians – we will be hearing from this letter and from Paul's second letter to the Corinthians for quite a few Sundays.

The importance of Corinth lay in its position on the Isthmus of Corinth, the shortest route from the Adriatic to the Aegean and thus from Europe to Asia. The ancient Greek city was destroyed by the Romans in 146BC. The Corinth of the New Testament times was founded by Julius Caesar in 44BC. It was a wealthy city, most of the wealth coming from trade. It is estimated that the population would have been made up of one-third free full citizens, one-third freedmen (ex slaves whose freedom was restricted by commitments to their former owners) and one-third slaves. It was a city of many temples and gods, many philosophical traditions and a sizeable Jewish population. In addition Corinth had a reputation as a city of pleasure and vice both in Greek and Roman times. It was into this world that Paul arrived in 50AD. Corinth has been described as the New Testament city most like our modern cities – international population, great wealth, poverty, education, trade, many different ways of thinking, moral confusion, religious diversity, exploitation, injustice, etc., you name it, Corinth had it!

The Church that Paul founded in Corinth had all the diversity one would expect in such a city. His letters are mostly taken up with dealing with the problems of the Corinthian Church. It is helpful when reading Paul's letters to the Corinthians to keep in mind the difficulties that form the background to the writing. These are some of the principal ones:

1. The Church in Corinth tended to divide into factions; loyalty to different leaders, different ways of preaching the message of Jesus and the following of teachings incompatible with the Gospel.
2. The Christians of Corinth tended to suffer from a "spiritual superiority", they saw themselves as important and with the right to look down on others.
3. Corinth was a melting pot for all kinds of religious and philosophical thinking and this infiltrated the Christian community.
4. Many of the Christian converts wanted to continue living the free moral lives they lived before becoming Christians. Two particular attitudes prevailed:-

- * “Christianity has no say over my “private life”, I am still free to live as I choose”.
 - * “My life is now “spiritual”, only the spiritual matters, and so what I do in the physical world and with my body has no importance”.
5. The Church in Corinth had many very wealthy members and they liked to flaunt that wealth even at meetings of the Christian community and in front of less well off fellow Christians.

From these few examples we can understand why the Church in Corinth tested Paul’s patience to the limits. They also forced him to clarify and develop his ideas, and the result is a treasury of the teaching of Jesus Christ and its application in everyday life.

These two letters deepen our understanding of who Jesus is and give us so much to reflect upon as we try to apply his teaching to the everyday reality of our lives.
