Gospel According to Luke

The event of today's Gospel takes place "in the fifteenth year of Tiberias Caesar's reign". The years of Tiberias Caesar's reign are 14 - 37AD. Thereafter the major event which receives such a solemn introduction in this Gospel takes place sometime in the year August 28AD - August 29AD. Not only are we told who the Emperor is but we are also told who the local political and military leaders are, the religious leaders, and the location and context of this event.

Let us attempt to write a similar introduction today: "In the second year of Barac Obama's Presidency when Gordon Brown was Prime Minister, Benedict XVI was Pope, Vincent Nichols, Archbishop of Westminster, in the affluent technology dominated and multicultural city of London...."

What, then, is this event that Luke needs to give such a solemn introduction? "The word of God came to John the Baptist". We have just began reading Luke's Gospel and we will have an extract from it almost every Sunday for the next year. Luke's Gospel and its second volume, the Acts of the Apostles, are all about the word of God and its spread. The word of God which John the Baptist and a number of others receive is destined to spread everywhere, to the very ends of the earth. The quotation from Isaiah which today's Gospel quotes, tells us: "All mankind shall see the salvation of God". This long and solemn introduction is important for a number of reasons:

1. We always hear the word of God in the historical, political, economic, cultural, religious, social and personal circumstances in which we are living. When the word of God comes to us, it comes into our entire reality and our experience of our reality.
2. We are who our cultural, historical and religious circumstances makes us and we can only hear the word of God when we are true to who we are. We can only hear the word of God as 21st Century residents of London and in the context of our real lives today.

3. The word of God which we receive is not for us personally, it is not a private possession. The word of God is a gift for the entire world in which we live. The entire reality which we live must be permeated, challenged and transformed by the word we have received.
4. John the Baptist is far more important than any other person mentioned in this Gospel [with the exception of Zechariah, his father, who received the word of God earlier in the story]. No success, power, influence or fame can be an equal to the Word of God. Those who have received, lived and shared the word of God are truly important people in our world.
5. Tiberias and all the other “important” people mentioned in this introduction are totally unaware of what has happened to John in the wilderness, but the effects of what happened to John will reach all of them [Acts of the Apostles ends with Paul preaching the word of God in Rome “in all freedom and without hindrance”]. Not even the power of Rome can stop the word of God received by a poor, obscure but holy man in the wilderness.
