

APPENDIX II. TRADESMEN, CRAFTSMEN AND PROFESSIONALS IN HUNTLY 1912–1914

Compiled by Janet Starkey for her book Strathbogie, the Gordons and 'the Land o' Cakes', available from the Orb's Community Bookshop, Huntly or via this website.

Those known to have telephones are marked accordingly. In Britain, the post office had a monopoly on mail and was responsible for inland telegrams and telephones from 1911. In Huntly, the telegraph system was linked to the railway. The first telephone in Huntly was installed in 1896 for George Arnott & Sons; by 1901 there were eight subscribers. Telephone messages were conveyed via a local operator and trunk calls, if available at all, were complicated and rarely used. There were intricate arrangements for postal delivery through a network of post offices near railway stations, and post horses. In 1913, job and post horses could be hired from R. Symon, Littlejohn Street, Huntly, and from George Watt, Gartly Station. The post office in Huntly in 1913 was located in the former Court House on the Square run by postmaster, Alexander Larnach. Its full-time postman was Alick Jessiman. In Gartly, A.W. Ord ran the village shop at the Railway Station and in Ruthven the Post Office was run by Jane Watt.<sup>1</sup>
