food4food @ St Andrew's Hall

The food4food community café offers a lunch option with a difference. As well as promoting affordable, freshly made food the café, run by local charity wintercomfort for the homeless also provides job skills training for people with experience of homelessness. The café operates at St Andrew's Hall and was officially opened by the Mayor of Cambridge Councillor Ian Nimmo-Smith and the Right Reverend Stephen Conway, Bishop of Ely in October. The launch event included a buffet lunch and a cake baked by three of the project's trainees, who told the guests a little bit about the circumstances which had brought them to wintercomfort. The charity works year round to provide support to people who are homeless, or at risk of homelessness in Cambridge. The day centre on Victoria Avenue offers a range of support, from ensuring that basic welfare needs are met, through programmes of learning and personal development, and ultimately to opportunities for participation in workplace training projects such as the café and our sister project food4food catering, which delivers quality buffets to private clients across the city.

The café is now in full swing and serving hot and cold lunches every Tuesday to Friday lunchtime at St Andrew's Hall. For more information or to get in touch, visit our website www.food4foodcafe.org.uk

We will also be serving Christmas lunches in the café between 13th—16th December. Come and join us for some festive fare and celebrate the season of goodwill by supporting a project which really can change lives in our local community.

CCA exists to support facilities and promote activities in Chesterton and is delighted to be the publisher of this newsletter and to be part of the editorial team.

So what have we been up to recently? We continue to work with Friends of Milton Road Library to secure its long-term future.

Our Village Sign Competition attracted a very large number of entries, most from the Shirley School and these can be seen via a link on our website. The winner was Meg Clarke of Fen Road. We had many suggestions for a location but no outright winner at this stage.

We are also engaged with the City Council's open spaces team on ideas for the future of the open space between St Andrew's Road and the river and also Chesterton Recreation Ground in Church Street. We have suggested replacing the existing changing rooms and public toilets with a pavilion. This would mean quite a lot of things being moved around but the result would be much better facilities for all.

On 8th March 2012 we will have an event at St Andrew's Hall to promote existing leisure and sporting activities in Chesterton and find out from you what is missing that you would like get involved in locally.

For latest news and how to join see www.mycca.org.uk. We want to make the site as comprehensive as possible and urgently need a webmaster to help keep it up to date. Interested? Get in touch via the contact page.

Editorial

Santa Claus and Baby Jesus; reindeer and a donkey; tinsel and the straw of a Bethlehem stable: a mixture so varied it would not have been out of place at a planning meeting for Chesterton News! There aren't - to my knowledge - many shepherds amongst us, but the editorial team comprises representatives from a range of community organisations in Chesterton and has worked to create what we hope will be the first in a series of quarterly publications designed to spread the word about what's happening locally and to help foster community spirit and collaboration amongst us all. Whilst we aim to find grant-funding for future issues, generous funding for this issue has come from Chesterton Community Association, Hundred Houses Society and St Andrew's Church, and distribution is by local volunteers: our thanks to them, and to all our contributors. For the newsletter to continue we need your help: do you have news of an event you would like to publish or expertise you could offer us? If the answer is 'yes' - or even just 'maybe' - please get in touch. We'd love to hear from you.

With festive greetings from all the team,

Chesterton Festival

Chesterton Festival, now heading into its fourth year, is a wonderful example of an event which is community led, run and attended. Supported by local residents, local organisations, Cambridge City Council and others it aims to celebrate community life in Chesterton.

The 2011 Festival took place in June and was our biggest yet, with a wide range of activities for such a relatively small community: Friday night saw live music and a picnic outside Brown's Field Youth and Community Centre; Saturday was the big day on Pye's Recreation Ground: an 08:00 start for the volunteers involved in the festival, and an equally late finish, but it was worth it! When you have acts as diverse as Breakdance, Jazz, Bangladeshi singers and maypole-dancing then you know a community is really coming together to celebrate its strength and variety. So many people took part: at one end of the Rec. the Brown's Field and CHYPPS teams supervised children's activities in the Adventure Zone; there were tours of St Andrew's Church; and Chesterton Community Association kept a keen watch over all the stalls, where you could try everything from maggot-racing to Polish dancing! Sunday gave the perfect chance to chill out: a leisurely tour around Chesterton and a local history quiz finishing with some well earned beer at the Green Dragon...

Roll on next year!

Chesterton Festival 2012 will run from 29th June - 1st July, and all are invited to join the Steering Group at an open event to whet our appetites on Thurs. 23 Feb. at Brown's Field Youth and Community Centre. If you are interested in coming along, or getting involved in the Festival in any way (arena acts, stalls, sponsorship, helping out on the day...), please contact Eleanor at St Andrew's Hall on 306150 or email eleanor@standrews-hall.co.uk

Community Support

Mamunur Rashid, whom I interviewed for our newsletter, is somebody who believes in the importance of community. Since 1998, when he came to the UK from Bangladesh, he has been involved in "community works". In May 2006, he was instrumental in setting up the Boishaki Cultural Association, a non-profit organization, which promotes the culture of Bangladesh and organizes social and cultural activities for the Bangladeshi community in Cambridge. "It is good," he says, "for people to get together in a social atmosphere." The Association organizes days out for its members such as a trip to the seaside at Brighton and other interesting places. It also has an educational role, focusing on continuing education among the Bangladeshi community. Mamunur has always had an interest in education and has been a voluntary teacher of the Bangladeshi language to children for two years.

The Boishaki Cultural Association also makes some of the culture of Bangladesh available to Cambridge as a whole. Since the inception of the Chesterton Festival, the Association has taken part by playing traditional folk songs from Bangladesh as one of the Arena acts. "Bangladeshi folk music," says Mamunur, "is nice music." The folk songs of Bangladesh are many "different types of songs." The 20-minute concert at the Festival was a chance to "introduce the music to the wider community." Mamunur thought that the Festival was "a good place to be involved in the community", and a valuable opportunity for the different communities in Cambridge to work together. He tells me that the Association "is just beginning" and that "among the Bangladeshi community, anyone can be a member."

Mamunur Rashid's main focus is on working within the Bangladeshi Cambridge community and promoting Bangladeshi culture in the city. He was also involved recently in raising funds for the victims of the Sidr disaster. For a job he has been a taxi driver in Cambridge for the last 8 year and he likes "the job for its flexibility," giving him the chance to develop his community work. Mamunur is also a Cambridge news correspondent for the community channel, channel S.

He describes Bangladesh as a "hospitable" place and it was there, when growing up, that he first became aware of the importance of a strong, supportive community life. He sees the Boishaki Cultural Association as playing a supportive role in the Bangladeshi community in Cambridge. He is also an Executive member of Omar Faruque Mosque & Cultural Centre, and a former Executive member of Bongo Poribar Association: "I enjoy working with the community, I believe that we need to work together."

Women's Institute

East Chesterton Women's Institute meets at 7.30 on the fourth Tuesday of the month at St Andrew's Hall.

Like all WIs it is part of the women's movement which began in 1897 in Canada. In Britain the WI was set up in 1915 to revitalise rural communities and to encourage women to become more involved in producing food during the First World War. Today it is no longer an exclusively rural society and can be found in villages, towns and cities throughout the land, on the internet and even on Facebook and Twitter, but the emphasis is still on providing a place for women to meet, socialise and have an influence on the issues that affect them.

Membership of your local WI will bring you into contact with a friendly group of women from your area who meet up every month for chat and a talk or demonstration on a subject of interest. Beyond that it will also offer you a wide variety of events and outings organised by the County Federation, a voice in matters of national interest such as the current Love your Libraries campaign, and access to dozens of courses at its own Denman College in Oxfordshire.

If you would like to come along to one of the meetings you would be made most welcome. Please email annienicol@googlemail.com or ring 07971 004405 for more information.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE

CELEBRATES AGE

A new brochure listing all-year-round activities in Cambridge City for over 50s has been produced by the Cambridgeshire Celebrates Age partnership.

Copies are available from local community centres, Council reception areas and at www.cambridge.gov.uk.

Unsung Contributions

I met Councillor Ian Nimmo-Smith at St Andrew's Hall to talk about his role as Mayor of Cambridge, what the position entails, its challenges and fulfilments, and the themes he has focused on during his time as Mayor.

Each year the council appoints the Mayor for a year. The Mayor is not a party political figure, the parties who make up the council, at the moment Labour and Liberal Democrat, are obliged to share the role on a yearly basis. Ian Nimmo-Smith describes the role of Mayor as a mixture of "ambassador, civic figurehead", of welcoming guests to the city and representing Cambridge at formal occasions. Another aspect of the Mayor's brief is to be the chairperson for council meetings but the role also has important social dimensions. For example, the Mayor's visits to different sections of the Cambridge community are a means, for the community visited, to know itself recognized and valued by the wider community.

As a representative figure in the Cambridge community I ask Ian about what he sees as the social problems facing the city. He talks about the areas of Cambridge where there is a mixture of low incomes and high unemployment. He also says there are "substance abuse problems" which are being addressed in a number of ways, "through family centres, advice organisations." The solutions to the city's problems come from local action and presence. He is impressed by what he sees as the role of St. Andrew's Hall, "a Noah's Ark", providing both "a springboard for groups within the Church to take forward their interests" and also as a place which provides "a local point of presence for organisations providing social support."

I ask him about what he sees as the challenges of the role. "Having enough time to do all the things you can do." There are, inevitably, "hectic periods." One of the challenges is trying to strike a balance between being "available and responsive" and trying to maintain a guiding theme for his term in the post. Each Mayor, during their year in the post, has a theme or themes, issues which they feel strongly about and wish to highlight. Ian has focused on two while being Mayor, emphasizing the importance of gardens and open spaces throughout the city and focusing on "young people as exponents of performing arts." He believes that the arts, music and theatre offer an empowering resource for young people. Participating in musical performance or theatre gives young people "a lot of fun, a lot of self-confidence, and a continuing source of interest to keep with them throughout their lives." He speaks with great enthusiasm about the arts, providing "an enriching part of what society can provide." Artistic participation is what matters most socially, Ian believes. The difference, for young people, is between "getting into a rock band rather than listening to a rock band." He recently saw an excellent example of this type of participation, a performance of Purcell's Dido and Aeneas by the Cambridge Youth Opera.

What Ian finds most fulfilling about the role of Mayor is its social aspect, "meeting people, hearing their stories." The job is an opportunity to appreciate "the different aspects of Cambridge. The contributions people are making in an invisible, unsung way."

News from the churches

Chesterton Methodist Church, Green End Road

We are hosting the Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony at our church on Wednesday 7 December at 6pm to which everyone from the community is welcome.

The church has been through a time of change this year, and recently made the decision to come under the umbrella of Wesley Church for the immediate future. Jason Balbirnie, the community outreach worker from Wesley, has been spending a good deal of time in Chesterton in recent weeks. He ran a very successful holiday club at half-term which has brought several new people into the life of the church.

The Wednesday coffee mornings have been re-established (10am-12 noon) and again, this is open to anyone.

St Andrew's Church, Church Street

On Sunday 29 January St Andrew's will be hosting a civic service at 10am. The mayor, Ian Nimmo-Smith, accompanied by councillors and officers, will be processing down St Andrew's Road and into the church just before 10am for the annual 'Obit sermon'. All are welcome at the service, which will include some bits of local history – why we in Chesterton regard Cambridge as a younger brother, for instance, or why the improvement of drains led to the vicar and churchwardens handing over responsibility for them (and much else in local life).

Regular Sunday services at St Andrew's are at 8am, 10am and 6.30pm.

Full details can be found on our website (www.standrews-chesterton.org) or on our calendars, available at the back of church.

A letter from Revd Nick Moir, Vicar of St Andrew's

Dear friends

There was a famous Christmas Day during the 1914-18 War when there was a ceasefire, and the two armies emerged from the trenches and played a game of football. They even sung Silent Night together before returning to their trenches and the return of hostilities the next day.

What does that scene tell us? That there is something about the Christmas story that uniquely affects us. On the human level, it is the birth of a child – something that can turn the most hard-bitten of fathers into cooing sentimentalists. On the more divine level, it is the claim that the birth of this child has opened the eyes of the world to the very nature of God.

The story that surrounds it helps, not least the 'Peace on earth' of the angels. And the other stories that are told at this season – such as A Christmas Carol – reinforce our sense that Christmas has a magic all of its own.

As years pass by, however, the magic can fade somewhat. Christmas Day doesn't seem that different from any other day (it did feel very different when we were younger). We tend then to look to the next generation to rekindle that special feeling – and perhaps even only to enjoy Christmas through our children and grandchildren.

I often hear people saying 'Christmas is for children'. But is it? I used to brush that comment aside (at least inwardly) and say (or think), 'Of course it's not just for children; Christ came for all of us and it's for all of us to marvel and celebrate.'

But there is another way of looking at it. There is a scene in the gospels when children who were enjoying being with Jesus were shooed away by those who were next to him. Jesus rebuked those disciples, saying, 'Unless you become like a child, you cannot enter the kingdom of Heaven.' In other words, he was saying that if you want to discover fullness of life you must rediscover your own childhood – become a child again!

One of the blessings of parenthood (and, I imagine, grandparenthood) is that you have the chance to revisit your own childhood – as, for instance, when fathers rediscover their longing for train sets. Playing with children, sharing their toys or reading them stories can reawaken the child within.

Parents also find that they want to protect their children from some of the murkier aspects of being 'adult'; consequently they can find themselves turning back to a simpler and purer morality themselves. Not surprisingly then, the parents of young families look to the church as a place of safety and nurture for their children – but also for themselves. And the church seems to welcome large numbers of them, especially at Christmas where the divine, Christian story intersects with their very human story at the celebration of a birth – and in all the hopes and fears that come with it.

So I don't worry if Christmas is for children, because maybe the key to it is for all of us to become like little children – and only then will the wonder of it all be rediscovered by us rather world-weary grown-ups. Christmas is for everyone, but only by becoming like a child can we truly enter into it.

If that is so, it is just like the kingdom of Heaven of which Jesus spoke.

A very happy Christmas to you all.

Yours sincerely

Nick

Hundred Houses' Camera Club

The club has only been going for three years, but has accomplished a lot in a short time. How did we start? Like most good ideas, over a cup of coffee at the Hundred Houses Residents' coffee morning. From that conversation we booked a meeting room and started our monthly meetings. At first it was like the blind leading the blind...

Some tenants from Granta Housing came to one or two of our first meetings, which was good as their support worker knew quite a bit about digital cameras and is a keen photographer. We have had speakers from different camera/video clubs to give advice and tips, a former Cambridge News photographer talked about his life as the paparazzi. We learnt how to cut our own picture mounts, and must now be doing something right as club members have won prizes in two competitions. In January 2012 a tutor from a higher education college in Cambridge will show us how to use our cameras to their full potential, and how to enhance photographs using software.

For the last two years we have organised and sponsored a photography competition as part of Chesterton Festival. The first year's theme was 'A Picture of Chesterton', and we received 37 entries for the over-18s category, which we thought was quite good for a first year. The club was so inspired by entries that we have now produced a DVD showing a pictorial walk around Chesterton, and sold 100 copies, which is very satisfying.

The Camera Club stall at the 2011 Chesterton Festival

At last year's Festival we ran our second competition, 'Recreation and Leisure', sponsored by the Hundred Houses Society. This time we received a total of 110 entries from the three age categories - over 18s, under 18s and under 9s. We believe the increase in entries from young people was due to the help and support of Brown's Field Youth & Community Centre and Granta Housing who provided six cameras which were loaned out to enable young people to take and enter their pictures. We also had a stall at the Festival, selling our framed original photographs, digital clocks and unique greeting cards. At the end of a very pleasant day, the icing on the cake was that our stall was awarded a prize for the best-dressed stall. Our gazebo was decorated 'VE day' and we had dressed in period costume.

The Camera Club will be organising the photography competition again for Chesterton Festival 2012: we want your take on Chesterton, with a caption to your picture. Please join in with 'THE BIG SNAP' and enter your photograph (s) (up to 6 per person). The competition is judged each year by three independent judges and we have no input or sway on their decisions...

If you would like more information on the photography competition or details about the Camera Club, please email tenantsnews@btinternet.com or call 07795816625
