

In the small hours of march the 26th, 1930, a _____ storm _____ the west coast of Scotland. The _____ seas that it had whipped up and _____ against the foot of the cliffs, and the tigerish tempest ran up the face of them and grabbed _____ house on the top of the cliff in its jaws.

The house _____ and _____ in the teeth of the wind, and Kirstie, walking in sudden fright, was sure the roof must go.

The noise of the storm was _____. Angus will be _____, thought Kirstie, and she _____ out of bed and _____ to her little brother's room next door. Her mother arrived at the same moment carrying an oil lamp by its light they could see that Angus was sleeping _____, sleeping like the baby he had only been a few years before. Outside, the thunder _____ and the lightening _____, the wind _____ and the rain _____. Angus snored.