Mountain Gorillas And Coronavirus

Mountain Gorillas and many types of apes may be at as much risk of Coronavirus as humans are. This is because they are very similar and often contract similar diseases. Humans have been warned to stay away from them as much as possible and even before the outbreak they were told to stay at least 7 meters away from them. Most gorilla tourism has been closed down. This disease could be very dangerous to already endangered animals.

As the day passed the winds got stronger, the waves were like mountains crashing on the boat. The ship lurched back and forth I watched the other sailors work hard to cut down their masts so the wind wouldn't catch them. If the masts were cut down it would help us by decreasing the chance of the waves toppling us over but I was soon convinced that we were going down.
