Solid family tent

THIS PLATINUM tent from SunnCamp is a little triumph – it successfully addresses the need for storage space in a family tunnel.

The Triumph is a three-pole tunnel with a sewn-in groundsheet. Additional poles create a tent porch on one side, and an annexe on the other.

At the back are two large mesh vents, each protected by a storm flap. Cowl-protected vents are located in the rear wall between the back panel and main pole.

One wall has a door protected by a storm porch. This is mirrored by another door in the opposite wall. Although not present in our pre-production test tent, the rear door will have a mesh panel to keep out the bugs.

A panoramic window sits to the right of the storm porch and backs on to a porthole in one of the inner tents. This has a zip-up flap for privacy. Of course, the inner can be removed to create an L-shape living area.

The opposite wall has that annexe. This opens on to the second inner tent to make a superb storage area, dressing room – or home to a portable toilet. The annexe has a mesh vent with a zip-close external curtain. Both inner and annexe have doors – just the job for a little privacy when nature calls.

A six-pocket hanging organiser hides the large space that separates the inner tents.

Two large panoramic windows in the front panel provide plenty of light – both are topped by mesh vents.

Camping says Many campers have fond memories of SunnCamp tents yet here is one company that has kept a low profile in recent years. As a result, its 2009 range of tents, that builds on its eye-catching 2008 models, comes as a breath of fresh air.

At first glance, the Triumph looks like a standard three-pole tunnel, but it has some really nice features – like that side entrance/dressing room/toilet. If you want a neat family tent that is a little different to the norm then check out the brand – we will look at more models in future issues. CG
