HISTORY OF THE ABBEY HOTEL

The hotel occupies three interconnected townhouses that are part of the North Parade terrace. This terrace was designed and laid out in 1738 by John Wood the Elder, a prominent architect of Bath at the time. The buildings are constructed from the local soft-hued limestone, characteristic of Bath's architecture.

Originally, these Georgian townhouses served as lodging houses until around 1890, when they were transformed into The Fernley Temperance Hotel. During World War II, the hotel was requisitioned by the Admiralty for use as offices. After the war, it was returned to its owners, refurbished, and reopened as the largest hotel in Bath.
