HOT KING COAL

King's Cross has been regeneration city for ages; now it's adding a super hot retail spot in the shape of the Dickensque Coal Drops Yard. Nothing Victorian about the shops involved, though — a shiny new Tom Dixon HQ, cool AF brands Manifesto and Lost Property of London, Paul Smith and Cubitts — and three new restaurants from Spanish royalty Barrafina.

BOB SQUAD

Time to chop your hair, specifically into a summery short box bob. See superhot models Kris Grikaite and Cara Taylor (right), and Selena Gomez. Keeps you cool on the Central line, plus bobs have more fun.

SHELLOUT

Old-school shellfish is back. Oysters, sure, but also whelks (left, with seriously punchy garlic mayo at Leroy) and cockles (at the so-hot-right-now Brat, served in liver sauce). Trust us.

Our new TV hero: Alex 'I'm pretty sure I'm a psychopath' Lawther, star of our black comedy obsession 'The End of the Fing World'. We love.

WILL SWIPE FOR WORK

Networking is the new dating. See, Bumble Bizz and Ripple, made by a group of ex-Tinder employees.

OFF THE SCALES

Leopard print has changed its spots — to snake. Not real snakeskin, duh, but rather snake print, as seen at Chloé (left) and even on Tom Ford's AW18 men's ties.

“traj”
Short for tragique, obs.

BLOOMING GREAT

Bloomsbury has always been a bit of a weird one — not much there besides Noble Rot and the ghosts of wife-swapping, suicidal Edwardian feminists. But WCI is kicking off: two well cool hotels (The Principal, with Dalston party restaurant Neptune; the swanky L'Oscar), chic women's club The AllBright, brilliant Fortitude Bakehouse in a garage and most importantly, a second branch of Roti King.

L'Oscar, L'Oscar: the new Bloomsbury hotel
