Last call for new National Trust for Scotland Trustees

Members of the National Trust for Scotland are being offered the opportunity to apply to join the Board of Trustees of the conservation charity.

The Trust cares for more than 100 heritage sites across Scotland from the spectacular Culzean Castle and Country Park in Ayrshire to the sub-tropical oasis of Inverewe Garden in the North West and out to the remote and wild St Kilda in the west. Trustees will play a key role aiding the Trust as it fulfils its commitment of protecting Scotland's heritage for future generations.

There are three roles to be filled and the Trust is looking for applicants with a broad commercial legal background as well as candidates with an experience of collections management and conservation and in particular interpretation and engagement with visitors and candidates with experience of the commercial management of land, buildings and estates.

Sir Moir Lockhead, Chairman of the Board of Trustees said: "We need new Trustees to help us to continue to take the Trust forward and deliver on our commitment to protect and conserve Scotland's heritage. These openings on the Board offer us the opportunity to bring in new faces, skills and talents to guide our work and help Scotland's heritage thrive."
