

NATIONAL TRUST FOR SCOTLAND MEDIA RELEASE

11 April 2018

Learn about the stunning needlework at Culross Palace

The National Trust for Scotland's Culross Palace is offering you the rare opportunity to meet its needlework group.

A guide led tour through the property will give visitors a real sense of what it would have been like to live in Culross Palace in its prime, with original painted woodwork and beautifully restored 17th and 18th-century interiors.

Volunteers from the award-winning, highly acclaimed, needlework group will accompany the tour, talking about their beautiful work within the Palace.

The morning will be rounded off with a workshop where participants will learn historic needlework stitches.

Linda Whiteford, Senior Assistant Culross Palace said, "Our talented needlework volunteers have a wealth of expertise between them and are very proud of their work within the Palace. This event will allow them to share their knowledge and bring the needlework to life."
